UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT
NORTHERN DISTRICT OF CALIFORNIA
SAN JOSE DIVISION

RODERICK MAGADIA, Plaintiff,
v.
WAL-MART ASSOCIATES, INC., et al.,
Defendants.

Case No. 17-CV-00062-LHK
FINDINGS OF FACT AND CONCLUSIONS OF LAW

Plaintiff Roderick Magadia, on behalf of 3 classes (collectively, “Plaintiffs”), brings suit against Defendants Wal-Mart Associates, Inc. and Wal-Mart Stores, Inc. (collectively, “Wal-Mart”) regarding alleged violations of California wage and hour laws. Specifically, Plaintiffs claim Wal-Mart violated: (1) Cal. Lab. Code § 226.7 for failure to pay adequate compensation for missed meal breaks; (2) Cal. Lab. Code § 226 for failure to provide accurate itemized wage statements; (3) Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code § 17200 et seq. (“UCL”) for engaging in unfair and unlawful business practices; and (4) Cal. Lab. Code § 2698 (“PAGA”) because Wal-Mart failed to pay adequate compensation for missed meal breaks and failed to provide accurate itemized wage statements. ECF No. 1-1 at ¶¶ 24-42. However, the operative claims are claims (1) and (2) because as explained below, the UCL merely extends the statute of limitations for claim (1), and PAGA

1 provides for penalties for underlying violations of the California Labor Code.

2 On January 9, 2018, the Court granted Plaintiffs’ motion for class certification. The Court 3 certified the following 3 classes:

4 Meal Period Regular Rate Class: All current and former California 5 non-exempt retail store employees of [Wal-Mart] who received non-6 discretionary remuneration, including “MYSHARE INCT,” and was 7 paid any meal period premium payments in the same period that the 8 non-discretionary remuneration was earned, at any time between 9 December 2, 2012, through the present.

10 Overtime/INCT Wage Statement Class: All current and former 11 California non-exempt employees of [Wal-Mart] who received 12 “OVERTIME/INCT,” at any time between December 2, 2015, 13 through the present.

14 Final Wage Statement Class: All former non-exempt employees 15 who worked for [Wal-Mart] in the State of California and whose 16 employment terminated (whether voluntarily or involuntarily) at any 17 time from December 2, 2015 to the present.

18 ECF No. 84 at 22. The Court also appointed Roderick Magadia as class representative. Id.

19 Wal-Mart moved to decertify the Meal Period Regular Rate Class. ECF No. 132. The 20 Court denied Wal-Mart’s decertification motion on November 13, 2018. ECF No. 187.

21 On October 30, 2017, Plaintiffs moved for partial summary judgment on Plaintiffs’ claim 22 under PAGA, Cal. Lab. Code §§ 2698–2699.5. ECF No. 67. On May 11, 2018, the Court granted 23 Plaintiffs’ motion for partial summary judgment on Plaintiffs’ PAGA claims. ECF No. 121. On 24 June 25, 2018, the Court denied Wal-Mart’s request for leave to file a motion for reconsideration.
25 ECF No. 130.

26 On July 26, 2018, Wal-Mart moved for partial summary judgment on Plaintiffs’ three 27 remaining claims. ECF No. 131. On September 27, 2018, the Court denied Wal-Mart’s motion for 28 partial summary judgment. ECF No. 157.

The Court held a 3-day bench trial in this matter beginning on November 30, 2018. The parties filed post-trial briefs on December 7, 2018. ECF Nos. 214, 215. Having considered the evidence and arguments of counsel, the relevant law, and the record in this case, the Court hereby enters the following findings of fact and conclusions of law.

1 place between a supervisor and the employee to determine the reason the exception occurred. Id.
2 at 244:12-24. If necessary, an internal Wal-Mart investigation may begin based on the reason for 3 the meal exception. Id. at 244:25-245:4. This investigation is conducted using a meal investigation 4 worksheet. Id. On the worksheet, the employee reports the reason the meal exception occurred. Id.
5 at 250:9-13. Then, the supervisor determines whether the meal exception was voluntary or 6 involuntary. Id. at 306:9-307:8. Once that takes place, the results of the investigation are encoded 7 into Wal-Mart’s Exception Management System (“EMS”) as numbered codes that stand for a 8 particular reason the Wal-Mart employee reported as resulting in a meal exception. Id. at 309:10-9 15. There are three codes that are relevant to the instant case: code 1 (associate initiated customer 10 support); code 5 (manager directed, no coverage for customer support); and code 12 (management 11 directed). Id. at 276:18-21; id. at 360:22-24; id. at 361:8-17.

12 However, Magadia, the named Plaintiff, never suffered a meal exception coded as 1, 5, or 13 12. ECF No. 214 at 15. Moreover, Magadia always received a meal break, albeit the break was 14 sometimes later than scheduled. Tr. at 108:18-109:8. None of these late breaks were after the fifth 15 hour worked, with a sole exception. Id. at 118:25-119:5. During the entire time he worked at Wal-
16 Mart, Magadia recalled only having one meal break after the fifth hour worked, but does not recall 17 what date or year that meal exception took place. Id.

18 When a Wal-Mart employee incurs a meal exception, a meal premium is automatically 19 paid. Id. at 144:11-20. The meal premium is paid at the employee’s base rate of pay. Id. at 145:13-20 16. That means the rate paid for the meal premium is not adjusted upward based on, for instance, 21 MyShare incentive plan payments. Id. at 145:17-146:1.

22 C. Cal. Lab. Code § 226(a) for Failure to Provide Accurate Itemized Wage 23 Statements

24 1. Statements of Final Pay

25 Wal-Mart pays employees on a biweekly basis. ECF No. 176 at 8. In line with this 26 practice, Wal-Mart provides employees with biweekly wage statements corresponding to the pay 27 period. Id. These wage statements list the start and end dates of the pay period. Id. When an

1 employee is terminated, Wal-Mart pays all wages earned through the date of termination by check
2 on the day of termination. Id. at 9. On the date of termination, the employee also receives a 3 “Statement of Final Pay” that lists the wages being paid to the employee at the end of 4 employment. Ex. 13-1. These statements of final pay do not specify pay period start or end dates.
5 ECF No. 176 at 9. However, Wal-Mart also generates a final wage statement at the close of the 6 normal biweekly pay period that does contain pay period start and end dates. Tr. at 171:10-12; Ex.
7 16-1. Wal-Mart tells a terminated employee how to access this final wage statement during the 8 employee’s exit interview. Tr. at 165:16-167:5. Upon his termination from Wal-Mart, Magadia 9 received a statement of final pay that did not include the pay period start and end dates. Ex. 13-1.

10 2. OVERTIME/INCT Line Item on Wage Statements

11 Wal-Mart employees who receive a MyShare incentive award at the end of a quarter and 12 also worked overtime during that quarter are given additional overtime pay based on having 13 received the incentive. ECF No. 176 at 8. The additional overtime pay appears retroactively on the 14 employee’s wage statement as “OVERTIME/INCT.” Id. The amount of additional overtime pay is 15 determined by a formula that accounts for the number of overtime hours the employee worked, the 16 employee’s overtime rate, and the incentive award amount paid. Tr. at 136:14-19. The 17 OVERTIME/INCT item appears on the employee’s wage statement as a lump sum and does not 18 specify how many hours the employee worked or the employee’s hourly rate. ECF No. 176 at 8.
19 Magadia received wage statements containing OVERTIME/INCT line items that did not include 20 the hours worked and the rates of pay. Ex. 17-1.

21 D. Damages Calculations

22 Plaintiffs’ expert, Dr. Brian Kriegler, was certified at trial as an expert in wage and hour 23 damages. Tr. at 437:18-19. Dr. Kriegler relied upon a computational code written by his associates 24 to arrive at his final results; he did not manually calculate anything by hand due to the volume of 25 data provided. Id. at 486:9-17. For the calculation of all damages, Dr. Kriegler used the data 26 provided to him by Wal-Mart. Ex. 102-7 to 102-8. The Court will first address Dr. Kriegler’s 27 calculations regarding Plaintiffs’ first claim, which alleged that Wal-Mart failed to pay adequate

1 compensation for missed meal breaks. Then, the Court will address Dr. Kriegler’s calculations 2 regarding Wal-Mart’s second claim, which alleged that Wal-Mart failed to provide accurate 3 itemized wage statements.

4 1. Failure to Pay Adequate Compensation for Missed Meal Breaks

5 Dr. Kriegler calculated the meal exception claim damages under Plaintiffs’ two theories of 6 liability. First, Dr. Kriegler calculated damages for those employees who had meal exceptions
7 coded in EMS as 1, 5, or 12 (“Theory 1”). Ex. 201-7. The three relevant codes are: code 1 8 (associate initiated customer support); code 5 (manager directed, no coverage for customer 9 support); and code 12 (management directed). Tr. at 276:18-21; id. at 360:22-24; id. at 361:8-17.
10 Second, Dr. Kriegler calculated damages for employees who had meal exceptions coded as 5 or 12 11 (“Theory 2”), but not 1. Ex. 201-7.

12 For the calculation of principal damages under both theories of liability, Dr. Kriegler first 13 looked in the data for meal exceptions coded as 1, 5, or 12 (or alternatively, 5 or 12 under Theory 14 2). Tr. at 470:17-22. Then, Dr. Kriegler looked at the MyShare data, which showed the non-15 discretionary bonus amounts, covering the period that included the meal exceptions. Id. Using 16 these two pieces of information, Dr. Kriegler gave an example of how he did the calculation:

17 So, for instance, if there was a meal exception on February 1, 2013, 18 and there was a quarterly bonus going from January 1, 2013, through 19 March 31, 2013, hypothetically let’s suppose that award amount was 20 $1000 . . . and hypothetically let’s say there were ten workweeks with 21 some work time. . . . So per workweek, that [award amount] ends up 22 being $100 per workweek. For the workweek that the meal exception 23 occurred, I then prorated that $100 to a dollar amount per hour. So 24 that would be—let’s suppose there were 30 straight time hours in the 25 workweek, so I would take $100 and divide it by 30 hours to get 26 $3.33, and that would be the damages amount for that particular meal 27 exception.

23 Id. at 470:23-471:11. Dr. Kriegler conducted the above calculation for every single unique 24 employee that had a meal exception coded as 1, 5, or 12 (or alternatively, just 5 or 12), added up 25 the amounts, and arrived at his principal damages calculation of $21,115 for Theory 1. Id. at 26 471:13-17; Ex. 201-7. His principal damages for Theory 2 were calculated to be $3,911. Ex. 201-
27 7. Under both Theories, the damages run from December 2, 2012 (the statute of limitations date)

1 to August 5, 2018 (the most up-to-date data that Wal-Mart provided). Id.; Tr. at 471:21-22.

2 Dr. Kriegler also calculated pre-judgment interest. He did so by computing per annum
3 interest at a rate of 10%, with a pre-judgment accrual date of November 30, 2018. Tr. at 471:23-4 472:7. Under Theory 1, this computation resulted in a pre-judgment interest amount of $7,402. Ex.
5 201-7. Under Theory 2, his computation resulted in a pre-judgment interest amount of $1,533. Id.

6 Dr. Kriegler additionally calculated waiting time penalties under Cal. Lab. Code § 203 for 7 terminated employees only. Pursuant to Cal. Lab. Code § 203(a), “[i]f an employee willfully fails 8 to pay . . . any wages of an employee who is discharged or who quits, the wages of the employee 9 shall continue as a penalty from the due date thereof at the same rate until paid or until an action 10 therefor is commenced; but the wages shall not continue for more than 30 days.” Dr. Kriegler 11 relied on the termination dates provided in Wal-Mart’s data. Tr. at 472:22-473:13. Thus, Dr.
12 Kriegler assumed that each employee was working 8 hours a day and multiplied the employee’s 13 last base rate of pay by 30. Id. at 473:14-19. The Court presumes that Dr. Kriegler multiplied the 14 base rate of pay by 30 because under Cal. Lab. Code § 203(a), “the wages shall not continue for 15 more than 30 days” for any waiting time penalties. Thus, under Theory 1, § 203 penalties were 16 calculated to amount to $10,937,844. Ex. 201-7. Under Theory 2, § 203 penalties were calculated 17 to be $1,303,819. Id. These waiting-time penalties run from the statute of limitations date of 18 December 2, 2013 to August 5, 2018. Id.; tr. at 456:16-457:5.

19 Lastly, Dr. Kriegler calculated PAGA penalties for the meal exception claim. For each pay 20 period after October 4, 2015 (the statute of limitations date for the PAGA penalties) that there was 21 an alleged underpayment for a meal exception, Dr. Kriegler multiplied that by $100. Tr. at 478:1-22 479:10. The results obtained were $821,400 under Theory 1, and $70,000 under Theory 2. Ex.
23 201-7. The PAGA penalties run from October 4, 2015 to August 5, 2018. Id. Next, the Court will 24 address Dr. Kriegler’s calculations regarding Wal-Mart’s second claim, which alleged that Wal-25 Mart failed to provide accurate itemized wage statements.

26 2. Failure to Provide Accurate Itemized Wage Statements

27 Under Plaintiffs’ theory that Wal-Mart failed to provide accurate itemized wage statements

28

1 as required by Cal. Lab. Code § 226(a), statutory penalties for violations of that portion of the 2 Labor Code are provided in Cal. Lab. Code § 226(e). Cal. Lab. Code § 226(e) specifies a $50 3 penalty for the initial pay period in which a violation occurs and a $100 penalty for violations in 4 subsequent pay periods, not to exceed an aggregate penalty of $4,000. Wal-Mart is accused of 5 failing to provide accurate itemized wage statements in two respects. First, Wal-Mart is accused of 6 failing to provide the rates and hours worked for the OVERTIME/INCT line item. Second, Wal-
7 Mart is alleged to have failed to provide the pay period start and end dates for the final wages paid 8 in the statement of final pay. The Court addresses Dr. Kriegler’s damages calculations for each of 9 these alleged violations in turn.

10 a. OVERTIME/INCT Line Item

11 To calculate the § 226(e) penalty, Dr. Kriegler took Wal-Mart’s data, and for the first pay 12 period in which there was an overtime incentive payment (i.e., OVERTIME/INCT line item), Dr.
13 Kriegler assessed a $50 penalty per employee. Tr. at 446:25-447:14. For each subsequent pay 14 period in which there was an OVERTIME/INCT line item, Dr. Kriegler assessed a $100 penalty 15 per employee. Id. Dr. Kriegler calculated the total amount of § 226(e) damages for the 16 OVERTIME/INCT Wage Statement Class to be $48,046,000. Ex. 201-7. This calculation runs 17 from the statute of limitations date of December 2, 2015 to August 5, 2018. Tr. at 447:19-448:8.

18 To calculate the PAGA penalties, Dr. Kriegler multiplied each instance of an 19 OVERTIME/INCT line item per pay period by $250. Id. at 452:12-117. The total amount of 20 PAGA penalties calculated is therefore $131,427,750. Ex. 201-7. However, Dr. Kriegler admitted 21 that he made a mistake in calculating PAGA penalties here. Instead of using the PAGA statute of 22 limitations of October 4, 2015, he erroneously used a starting date of December 2, 2015 to 23 calculate the PAGA penalties. Tr. at 452:19-453:16. Thus, the calculated PAGA penalties run 24 from December 2, 2015 to August 5, 2018. Id. The actual PAGA penalties, had they been 25 calculated starting on the correct date of October 4, 2015, would have been higher. Id. at 451:25-26 452:4.

27 b. Statements of Final Pay

28

1 To calculate the § 226(e) penalty, Dr. Kriegler adopted the same tack as described above.
2 For a first termination, he assessed $50. Id. at 458:22-459:10. For subsequent terminations (as 3 there were some Wal-Mart employees who were hired and terminated more than once), he 4 assessed $100 per termination. Id. The total amount of damages calculated was $5,823,900. Ex.
5 201-7. This calculation runs from the statute of limitations date of December 2, 2015 to August 5, 6 2018. Tr. at 459:11-12; id. at 460:14-15.

7 Moreover, in calculating PAGA penalties, Dr. Kriegler did not make the same mistake as 8 discussed above regarding the statute of limitations date for the PAGA penalties. He used the 9 correct statute of limitations date of October 4, 2015, and multiplied each instance of a termination
10 by $250. Id. at 460:19-461:14. Thus, Dr. Kriegler calculated $28,928,500 for PAGA penalties 11 running between October 4, 2015 and August 5, 2018. Id.

12 3. Total Statutory and PAGA Damages Sought

13 For the Meal Period Regular Rate Class, Plaintiffs have calculated damages for meal 14 exceptions coded as 1, 5, or 12 as well as for meal exceptions coded just as 5 or 12. Specifically, 15 for meal exceptions coded as 1, 5, or 12, Plaintiffs request: $21,115 in principal damages for Wal-
16 Mart's alleged violations of § 226.7; $7,402 in pre-judgment interest; $10,937,844 in § 203
17 waiting time penalties; and $821,400 in PAGA penalties. Id. Alternatively, for meal exceptions 18 coded just as 5 or 12, Plaintiffs request: $3,911 in principal damages for Wal-Mart's alleged 19 violations of § 226.7; $1,533 in pre-judgment interest; $1,303,819 in § 203 waiting time penalties; 20 and $70,000 in PAGA penalties.

21 For the Final Wage Statement Class, Plaintiffs request $5,823,900 in statutory § 226(e) 22 damages and $28,928,500 in PAGA penalties for Wal-Mart's alleged violation of § 226(a)(6). Id.

23 For the OVERTIME/INCT Wage Statement Class, Plaintiffs request $48,046,000 in 24 statutory § 226(e) damages and $131,427,750 in PAGA penalties for Wal-Mart's alleged violation 25 of § 226(a)(9). Ex. 201-7.

26 In total, Plaintiffs request $226,013,911 in damages for the OVERTIME/INCT Wage 27 Statement Class, the Final Wage Statement Class, and the Meal Period Regular Rate Class (for 1 meal exceptions coded as 1, 5, or 12). Alternatively, Plaintiffs request $215,605,413 in damages

2 for the OVERTIME/INCT Wage Statement Class, the Final Wage Statement Class, and the Meal 3 Period Regular Rate Class (for meal exceptions coded as 5 or 12).

4 II. CONCLUSIONS OF LAW

5 The Court first turns to the Plaintiffs’ first claim for failure to pay adequate compensation 6 for missed meal breaks. Then, the Court turns to the Plaintiffs’ second claim for failure to provide 7 accurate itemized wage statements—namely, the failure to include the start and end dates of the 8 payment period on the statements of final pay, and the failure to list an hourly rate or hours 9 worked for the OVERTIME/INCT line item on wage statements. Lastly, the Court addresses the 10 parties’ requests for judicial notice.

11 A. Claim 1: Failure to Pay Adequate Compensation for Missed Meal Breaks, Cal.
12 Lab. Code § 226.7

13 Below, the Court analyzes whether Plaintiffs’ § 226.7 class claims and Magadia’s 14 individual § 226.7 claim can proceed as stated, the Court then finds that the § 226.7 class must be 15 decertified and that Magadia’s individual claim fails. Nevertheless, the Court cannot eschew a 16 discussion of the merits of Plaintiffs’ claims under § 226.7 because Plaintiffs still can demonstrate 17 that PAGA penalties should be awarded. Huff v. Securitas Sec. Servs. USA, Inc., 23 Cal. App. 5th 18 745, 760-61 (2018) (“PAGA states that an action may be brought by an employee against whom 19 one or more of the alleged violations was committed, a clear expression that the Legislature 20 intended that a PAGA plaintiff be affected by at least one, but not necessarily all, of the violations 21 alleged in the action” (emphasis added) (internal quotation marks omitted)). Thus, after 22 discussing Plaintiffs’ § 226.7 class claims and Magadia’s individual § 226.7 claim, the Court will 23 then discuss the merits of Plaintiffs’ PAGA claims under § 226.7.

24 1. Whether Plaintiffs’ Class Claims and Magadia’s Individual Claim Can Proceed

25 Magadia fails to satisfy the requirements of Rule 23(a) of the Federal Rules of Civil 26 Procedure as class representative of the Meal Period Regular Rate Class. Moreover, the Court 27 finds that Magadia has failed to show that his individual claim succeeds under the evidence

1 presented at trial.

2 a. The Class Claims

3 “Rule 23(a) states four threshold requirements applicable to all class actions: (1) 4 numerosity (a ‘class [so large] that joinder of all members is impracticable’); (2) commonality 5 (‘questions of law or fact common to the class’); (3) typicality (named parties’ claims or defenses 6 ‘are typical . . . of the class’); and (4) adequacy of representation (representatives ‘will fairly and 7 adequately protect the interests of the class.’).” Amchem Prods., Inc. v. Windsor, 521 U.S. 591, 8 613 (1997).

9 Magadia’s claims are not typical of the claims or defenses of the class. Thus, as class 10 representative, Magadia runs afoul of the typicality requirement of Fed. R. Civ. P. 23(a)(3).
11 Magadia also is not an adequate representative of the class. Thus, he does not meet the adequacy 12 requirement under Fed. R. Civ. P. 23(a)(4). It is of no moment that the Court already certified the 13 Meal Period Regular Rate Class as a class represented by Magadia. ECF No. 84 at 22. “Before 14 entry of a final judgment on the merits, a district court’s order respecting class status is not final 15 or irrevocable, but rather, it is inherently tentative.” Officers for Justice v. Civil Service Comm’n 16 of City & Cty. of San Francisco, 688 F.2d 615, 633 (9th Cir. 1982) (emphasis added).

17 First, “[t]he test of typicality is whether other members have the same or similar injury, 18 whether the action is based on conduct which is not unique to the named plaintiffs, and whether 19 other class members have been injured by the same course of conduct.” Hanon v. Dataproducts 20 Corp., 976 F.2d 497, 508 (9th Cir. 1992).

21 A meal break is defined as “a meal period of not less than 30 minutes” every five hours.
22 Cal. Lab. Code § 512(a). Wal-Mart investigates noncompliant meal breaks (i.e., “meal 23 exceptions”), and then encodes the results of the investigation into its EMS as numbered codes 24 that stand for a particular reason the Wal-Mart employee reported as resulting in a meal exception.
25 Tr. at 309:10-15. As discussed above, there are three codes that are relevant to the instant case: 26 code 1 (associate initiated customer support); code 5 (manager directed, no coverage for customer 27 support); and code 12 (management directed). Id. at 276:18-21; id. at 360:22-24; id. at 361:8-17.

1 Plaintiffs’ entire theory is predicated on employees who were allegedly denied a compliant meal
2 break and as a result, had their meal exception coded as 1, 5, or 12 in the EMS system. See, e.g.,
3 id. at 28:20-22 (“I want to say that the theory on [the meal break count] is based on what you
4 heard defense counsel say, meal exception codes 1, 5, and 12.”). Thus, the question becomes 5 whether Magadia suffered a meal exception encoded as 1, 5, or 12 in Wal-Mart’s EMS system.

6 In the joint pretrial statement the parties filed on November 1, 2018, Wal-Mart put 7 Plaintiffs on notice that Plaintiffs must demonstrate that Magadia suffered a meal period exception 8 coded as 1, 5, or 12. ECF No. 176 at 23. Specifically, Wal-Mart argued that “Plaintiff cannot 9 prove that Walmart denied Plaintiff . . . a meal period required by section 226.7,” and thus could 10 not prove that Magadia suffered a meal exception coded as 1, 5, or 12. Id.

11 At trial, on direct examination, Plaintiffs’ counsel only elicited that Magadia took “late” 12 meal breaks; Magadia never specified whether or not those took place after the 5th hour worked as 13 required for a § 226.7 violation.

14 Q. And for the times that you asked [to take a meal break], have there 15 been times then [your supervisor and assistant manager] told you that 16 you couldn’t go on your meal break?

17 A. Yes.

18 Q. And on those times, did you then have to take your meal break 19 after the scheduled time?

20 A. Yes.

21 Q. So would you then take a late meal break?

22 A. Yes.

23 Tr. at 85:12-19.

24 On cross-examination, counsel for Wal-Mart established that Magadia always received a 25 meal break, though it was sometimes late.

26 Q. And did [Wal-Mart] ever say, “no, you can’t take a break now, not 27 in 30 minutes, not in 1 hour, never?” Did that ever happen?

28 A. What do you mean, never take – they give me – they give me a break, but a late break.

Q. OK. So they always gave you a break, but sometimes the timing of it –

A. Late break

Q. – Was late based on the time it was scheduled?

A. Yes, sir.

Id. at 110:15-111:6

1 On redirect examination, Plaintiffs’ counsel failed to establish that Magadia ever suffered a 2 meal exception coded as 1, 5, or 12 in Wal-Mart’s EMS system, or that the sole meal exception 3 Magadia could remember took place within the 4-year statute of limitations.

4 Q. And was there a time when you got a lunch that was after the fifth 5 hour worked?

6 A. Yes.

7 Q. Do you recall how many times that happened?

8 A. I think I – I think at this – I think once, but I don’t remember what 9 date or what year.

10 Tr. at 118:25-119:5.

11 During oral closing arguments, Plaintiffs’ counsel did not dispute that Plaintiffs failed to 12 show at trial that Magadia had a meal exception coded as 1, 5, or 12. Tr. at 583:9-10 (“Now, 13 again, I’m not disputing the fact that I did not show that evidence.”). Nevertheless, Plaintiffs’ 14 counsel misleadingly represented to the Court that Magadia had meal exceptions coded as 1, 5, or 15 12, and even told the Court to go find that information in the record: “It’s in the data. I mean, you 16 can pull it up in the data.” Id. at 583:16-17. But in the end, in their post-trial briefing, Plaintiffs’ 17 counsel conceded that Magadia did not ever have a meal break exception coded as 1, 5, or 12.
18 ECF No. 214 at 15 (“Plaintiff concedes that [Magadia’s] meal exceptions were not coded as 1, 5, 19 or 12 in the EMS.”).

20 Therefore, Magadia has failed to show that he personally suffered a violation of Cal. Lab.
21 Code § 226.7 per Plaintiffs’ theory that meal exceptions coded as 1, 5, or 12 in EMS reflected 22 violations of § 226.7. Thus, Magadia’s claim is not typical of the class he purports to represent.

23 In Valentino v. Carter-Wallace, Inc., the district court appointed class representatives to 24 represent people who used a particular liver drug and developed “aplastic anemia or liver failure” 25 as a result. 97 F.3d 1227, 1229 (9th Cir. 1996). However, the Ninth Circuit vacated and remanded 26 the district court’s decision. Id. at 1235. As part of its reasoning, the Ninth Circuit doubted that 27 typicality had been established because the class representatives did not suffer from aplastic 28 anemia and had difficulty withdrawing from the drug in question. Id. at 1234. Here, like the Valentino class representatives, the named Plaintiff Magadia did not suffer the same type of injury

1 as the class he purports to represent. He does not have a meal break violation coded as EMS codes 2 1, 5, or 12. Therefore, Magadia does not satisfy the typicality requirement of Fed. R. Civ. P.
3 23(a)(3).

4 Second, Magadia fails to satisfy the adequacy requirement of Fed. R. Civ. P. 23(a)(4).
5 “The adequacy inquiry under Rule 23(a)(4) serves to uncover conflicts of interest between named 6 parties and the class they seek to represent.” Amchem, 521 U.S. at 625. “[A] class representative 7 must be part of the class and ‘possess the same interest and suffer the same injury’ as the class
8 members.” Id. at 625-26 (quoting East Tex. Motor Freight Sys., Inc. v. Rodriguez, 431 U.S. 395, 9 403 (1977)). The interests of the single class must be aligned with that of the named plaintiff. Id.
10 at 626.

11 Magadia has a conflict of interest with the class he purports to represent because he does 12 not possess the same interest and suffer the same injury as the class members. In Amchem, the 13 United States Supreme Court found it inappropriate that “named parties with diverse medical 14 conditions sought to act on behalf of a single giant class rather than on behalf of discrete 15 subclasses. In significant respects, the interests of those within the single class are not aligned.” Id.
16 Here, Magadia sought to act on behalf of a class of Wal-Mart employees with meal exceptions 17 coded as 1, 5, or 12 in the EMS system when he himself did not have meal exceptions coded as 18 such. Thus, Magadia’s interests in resolving the case conflict with the interests of the class 19 members. Therefore, Magadia is not an adequate class representative.

20 In conclusion, the Court hereby decertifies the Meal Period Regular Rate Class because 21 Magadia fulfills neither the typicality requirement of Fed. R. Civ. P. 23(a)(3) nor the adequacy 22 requirement of Fed. R. Civ. P. 23(a)(4).<sup>1</sup> As the meal period regular rate class has been decertified, 23 the Court now turns to Magadia’s individual claim that he is owed compensation for his meal

24 _____
25 <sup>1</sup> Plaintiffs also argue that if the Court were to find that Magadia lacks Article III standing, the 26 Court should remand the matter to state court. Here, the Court has not found a lack of Article III 27 standing, so the Court declines to remand the instant action to state court. Furthermore, remand is 28 only required if the Court lacks subject matter jurisdiction over all claims in the matter. Lee v.
American Nat’l Ins. Co., 260 F.3d 997, 1008 (9th Cir. 2001). Such is not the case here as evidenced by this Court’s jurisdiction over Plaintiffs’ second cause of action, discussed below.

1 period violation.

2 b. Magadia’s Individual Claim

3 Magadia could only recall one instance where he received a noncompliant meal break, but 4 could not remember the incident’s year or date. Because Plaintiffs bring a UCL claim, “[a]ny 5 action on any UCL cause of action is subject to the four-year period of limitations created by that 6 section.” Cortez v. Purolator Air Filtration Prods. Co., 23 Cal. 4th 163, 179 (2000) (emphasis in 7 original). A business practice that violates the California Labor Code through failure to pay wages 8 is a UCL cause of action. Id. at 178-79. Thus, the December 2, 2012 date is the cutoff date for the 9 4-year statute of limitations, as Plaintiffs first filed their claim on December 2, 2016. ECF No. 1-1 10 at Cover Sheet.

11 Magadia worked for Wal-Mart from 2008 to 2016. ECF No. 176 at 8. Because Magadia’s 12 employment at Wal-Mart began well before December 2, 2012, Magadia’s noncompliant meal 13 break may have occurred before the cutoff date for the statute of limitations for the meal period 14 claim. When questioned at trial about whether he ever received a meal break after the fifth hour 15 worked and how many times such an event may have occurred, Magadia responded: “I think I – I 16 think at this – I think once, but I don’t remember what date or what year.” Tr. at 119:4-5. Magadia 17 bears the burden of proof at trial that his claims are timely by a preponderance of the evidence.
18 Thus, because Magadia’s noncompliant meal break could have taken place before December 2, 19 2012, he has failed to prove by a preponderance of the evidence that the statute of limitations does 20 not bar his claim. Cf. Ryan v. Microsoft Corp., 147 F. Supp. 3d 868, 896 (N.D. Cal. 2015) 21 (granting motion to dismiss because “[p]laintiffs have not shown that an exception to the statutes 22 of limitations or tolling doctrine should apply”).

23 Moreover, as explained in detail above, Magadia’s theory of liability is that those with 24 meal exceptions coded as 1, 5, or 12 were the ones who were wronged by Wal-Mart’s payment 25 practices. See, e.g., Tr. at 28:20-22 (“I want to say that the theory on [the meal break count] is 26 based on what you heard defense counsel say, meal exception codes 1, 5, and 12.”). Magadia did 27 not have a meal exception coded as 1, 5, or 12 in Wal-Mart’s EMS system. Therefore, Magadia’s

1 claim also fails because Magadia has failed to show he was wronged under his own theory of 2 liability.

3 Thus, Magadia’s individual claim for a violation of Cal. Lab. Code § 226.7 fails because 4 Magadia has not shown that his claim is not barred by the statute of limitations. Furthermore, 5 Magadia’s claim is inconsistent with his theory of liability that the rights of employees with meal 6 exceptions coded as 1, 5, or 12 were violated under Cal. Lab. Code § 226.7.

7 Even though Plaintiffs’ class claim and Magadia’s individual claim cannot proceed under § 8 226.7, the Court next turns to the merits of the claim that Plaintiffs may still establish a claim for 9 PAGA penalties if Wal-Mart violated § 226.7 with respect to employees other than Magadia.

10 2. Liability under Cal. Lab. Code § 226.7

11 Under California law, if an employer fails to provide a compliant meal break, “the 12 employer shall pay the employee one additional hour of pay at the employee’s regular rate of 13 compensation.” Cal. Lab. Code § 226.7(c). A meal break is defined as “a meal period of not less 14 than 30 minutes” every five hours. Cal. Lab. Code § 512(a).

15 Wal-Mart currently does not factor in the MyShare incentive award, a nondiscretionary 16 quarterly bonus, Tr. at 134:22-135:8, in calculating what is an employee’s regular rate of 17 compensation. Rather, Wal-Mart pays the meal period premium at the employee’s base rate of 18 pay. ECF No. 176 at 9. The crux of Plaintiffs’ argument is that the regular rate of compensation an 19 employee receives should factor in the MyShare incentive award. Id. at 3. In the Court’s Order 20 denying Wal-Mart’s motion for partial summary judgment, the Court adopted the Plaintiffs’ 21 position that regular rate of compensation under § 226.7 means the employee’s base rate of 22 compensation plus “other forms of qualifying compensation.” ECF No. 157 at 8 (quoting Ibarra v.
23 Wells Fargo Bank, N.A., 2018 WL 2146380, at *3 (C.D. Cal. May 8, 2018)). Therefore, Wal-Mart 24 is in violation of § 226.7 by failing to pay employees who had a meal exception at their regular 25 rate of compensation, which means the employee’s base rate of compensation plus the employee’s 26 MyShare incentive award.

27 The question now becomes whether Plaintiffs’ Theory 1 (meal exceptions coded in the

1 EMS as 1, 5, or 12) or Theory 2 (meal exceptions coded in the EMS as just 5 or 12) renders Wal-
2 Mart liable for violating § 226.7. As described above, EMS code 1 means a meal exception 3 resulting from “associate initiated customer support”; EMS code 5 means a meal exception that 4 was management directed because of no coverage for customer support; and code 12 means a 5 meal exception that was management directed. Tr. at 276:18-21; id. at 360:22-24; id. at 361:8-17.
6 The Court finds that Theory 2 is the correct method of assessing liability.

7 Courts interpreting § 226.7 have held that “an employer need only relinquish control of the 8 employee for an uninterrupted thirty-minute period; the employer need not ensure a meal break is 9 in fact taken.” McLeod v. Michael’s Stores, Inc., 2009 WL 10674458, at *2 (C.D. Cal. Dec. 15, 10 2009); see also Brown v. Fed. Express Corp., 249 F.R.D. 580, 585 (C.D. Cal. 2008) (“It is an 11 employer’s obligation to ensure that its employees are free from its control for thirty minutes, not 12 to ensure that the employees do any particular thing during that time.”); White v. Starbucks Corp., 13 497 F. Supp. 2d 1060, 1088 (N.D. Cal. 2007) (“[I]t cannot be the rule that employers must ensure 14 that a meal period is actually taken, regardless of what an employee does, because that would 15 create a strict liability standard.”).

16 Wal-Mart’s director of global business services technology Victoria Moore testified that 17 “[a]ssociate initiated customer support [i.e., code 1] indicates the associate made the decision to 18 either miss their meal, have a short meal, or a meal late, a late meal, as a result of some type of 19 customer service action.” Tr. at 265:11-14 (emphasis added). This testimony was un rebutted.
20 Therefore, for EMS code 1, trial testimony established that the employee chose to engage in 21 customer support despite it being their meal period. As McLeod held, Wal-Mart had already 22 relinquished control over the employee for their meal period. It is up to the employee to decide 23 what to do with his or her time. If the employee chose to engage in customer support even though 24 it was the employee’s meal period, Wal-Mart cannot force that employee to take a compliant meal 25 period. There is no evidence here that Wal-Mart ordered the employee to engage in customer 26 service activities. Thus, the Court finds that EMS code 1 does not reflect a violation of § 226.7.

27 On the other hand, Moore testified that EMS codes 5 and 12 show that management

1 directed the employee to take a noncompliant meal break:

2 Q. And the third code you mentioned this morning was management 3 directed, no customer support. What does that mean?

4 A. The associate is – that code means it was – the meal exception was 5 manager directed. No coverage or for customer support.

6 Q. And in our review of the data contained in the Exception
7 Management System, we also came across the code that just says 8 manager directed without the customer support blurb.

9 A. Right.

10 Q. Is that the same thing basically as management directed?

11 A. Yes.

12 Id. at 265:20-266:6. Thus, because codes 5 and 12 reflect a Wal-Mart management decision not to 13 let the employee take a compliant meal break, these codes reflect a violation of § 226.7.

14 Wal-Mart argues that the EMS codes do not show who was actually denied a meal break.
15 Rather, they only show what Wal-Mart employees allege to be the reason a meal exception 16 occurred. However, Wal-Mart’s attempt to discredit its own process for investigating and 17 classifying meal exceptions in the EMS is unpersuasive. Testimony by Todd Stokes, Wal-Mart’s 18 divisional human resources director, demonstrated that Wal-Mart itself relies on this investigation 19 and classification process for identifying problems with employees’ behaviors relating to meal 20 periods:

21 Q. And this investigation would ultimately, the purpose of that 22 investigation is to end up determining who is accountable for that 23 meal violation, whether it’s management or the associate; is that 24 correct?

25 A. So one of the outcomes from that is that we can sometimes 26 determine the associate worked too long and didn’t take it, or 27 sometimes we may learn that a manager pulled an associate away and 28 didn’t let them take it. So those are the two general outcomes that can come from that.

Q. And those outcomes, as a matter of practice, should be recorded down somewhere; correct?

A. So, yes, there’s a form that’s filled out.

Q. And part of the reason for this investigation process is to determine who was accountable and have a discussion with them to make sure that it doesn’t happen again, is that correct?

A. That is – I would say that’s a good classification. We want to make sure that we address the behavior that needs to change.

Id. at 146:9-147:3. As Wal-Mart conducts an investigation, assigns a code to each meal period exception as a result of Wal-Mart’s investigation, and relies upon the results of Wal-Mart’s

1 investigation, Wal-Mart cannot turn around and repudiate the results of the investigation and 2 associated EMS entry to avoid liability. As such, the Court finds that the EMS codes are reliable 3 indicators of the reason why a meal exception occurred, because they are encoded as to the reason 4 a meal exception occurred after an investigation conducted by Wal-Mart.

5 In sum, the Court holds that Wal-Mart violated Cal. Lab. Code § 226.7(c) when it failed to 6 pay employees who had meal exceptions coded as 5 or 12 in the EMS system at their regular rate 7 of compensation. The regular rate of compensation includes the base rate of compensation plus the 8 employee’s MyShare incentive award. The Court next turns to the question of damages, as Wal-9 Mart has been found liable for violating § 226.7(c).

10 3. Damages

11 Here, the Plaintiffs claim principal damages, pre-judgment interest, Cal. Lab. Code § 203 12 waiting time penalties, and PAGA penalties. However, because both the class claims and 13 Magadia’s individual claim fail, the Court does not award principal damages, pre-judgment 14 interest, or § 203 waiting time penalties. Nevertheless, the Court awards PAGA penalties in the 15 amount of $70,000. See Ex. 201-7. Below, the Court discusses why it awards PAGA penalties 16 despite decertifying the class claims and finding that Magadia’s individual claim fails.

17 a. PAGA Penalties

18 The California Court of Appeal has held that “so long as [plaintiff] was affected by at least 19 one of the Labor Code violations alleged in the complaint, he can recover penalties for all the 20 violations he proves.” Huff, 23 Cal. App. 5th at 761; see also Holak v. K Mart Corp., 2015 WL 21 2384895, at *5 (E.D. Cal. May 19, 2015) (“By the plain language of the statute, an aggrieved 22 employee need only suffer one of the Labor Code violations alleged against his or her employer to 23 be able to bring a PAGA claim on behalf of . . . employees who suffered any Labor Code violation 24 at the hands of the employer. Plaintiff need not have actually suffered all of the Labor Code 25 violations she alleges to have taken place for purposes of seeking PAGA penalties.”); Jeske v.
26 Maxim Healthcare Servs., Inc., 2012 WL 78242, at *13 (E.D. Cal. Jan. 10, 2012) (“[Plaintiff] is 27 correct that she need not have suffered all PAGA violations for which she seeks to pursue civil

1 penalties.”). Huff convincingly explains that because in a PAGA case, the plaintiff is standing in 2 for the state, “it would be arbitrary to limit the plaintiff’s pursuit of penalties to only those Labor 3 Code violations that affected him or her personally.” 23 Cal. App. 5th at 757.

4 As discussed in further detail below, Magadia was affected by violations of Cal. Lab. Code 5 § 226 through Wal-Mart’s failure to provide accurate itemized wage statements. Therefore, under 6 Huff, it is of no moment that Wal-Mart did not violate Magadia’s rights under § 226.7 for failure
7 to pay adequate compensation for missed meal breaks. Magadia may still recover PAGA penalties
8 for violations of § 226.7 that other Wal-Mart employees suffered. Dr. Kriegler calculated PAGA 9 penalties under Theory 2 (meal exceptions coded in the EMS as just 5 or 12) to total $70,000. Ex.
10 201-7.

11 The Court acknowledges that it has discretion, pursuant to the California Labor Code, to 12 reduce a PAGA penalty if, “based on the facts and circumstances of the particular case, to do 13 otherwise would result in an award that is unjust, arbitrary and oppressive, or confiscatory.” Cal.
14 Lab. Code § 2699(e)(2). However, based on the facts and circumstances of the instant case, the 15 Court does not find that a $70,000 PAGA penalties award is unjust, arbitrary and oppressive, or 16 confiscatory. Therefore, the Court awards $70,000 in PAGA penalties to Wal-Mart employees 17 who had meal exceptions coded in the EMS system under codes 5 or 12 from October 4, 2015 to 18 August 5, 2018 for Wal-Mart’s violation of Cal. Lab. Code § 226.7.

19 Next, the court turns to Plaintiffs’ second claim for failure to provide accurate itemized 20 wage statements.

21 B. Claim 2: Failure to Provide Accurate Itemized Wage Statements, Cal. Lab. Code 22 § 226

23 To state a claim for failure to provide accurate itemized wage statements, Plaintiffs must 24 show that (1) Wal-Mart failed to provide compliant wage statements under Cal. Lab. Code § 25 226(a), (2) Wal-Mart’s failure to do so was “knowing and intentional,” and (3) Plaintiffs were 26 injured as a result. Cal. Lab. Code § 226.

27 At summary judgment, the Court found that Wal-Mart’s statements of final pay were 1 noncompliant because they do not include pay period start and end dates in violation of Cal. Lab.

2 Code § 226(a)(6). ECF No. 121 at 16. Moreover, the Court found that Wal-Mart’s wage 3 statements were noncompliant because the OVERTIME/INCT line item does not list an hourly
4 rate or hours worked in violation of Cal. Lab. Code § 226(a)(9). Id. at 13-14. This satisfies prong
5 (1) of the above requirements. Thus, Plaintiffs still must prove prong (2), that Wal-Mart’s failure 6 to provide compliant wage statements was “knowing and intentional,” and prong (3), that 7 Plaintiffs were injured as a result. The Court addresses each in turn.

8 1. Whether Wal-Mart’s Failure to Provide Compliant Wage Statements was 9 “Knowing and Intentional”

10 As aforementioned, the California Labor Code requires that a violation of § 226 be 11 “knowing and intentional.” Plaintiffs’ position is that provision of an inadequate wage statement 12 that is not a clerical error or an inadvertent mistake satisfies the “knowing and intentional” 13 requirement. ECF No. 214 at 9. On the other hand, Wal-Mart argues that knowing and intentional 14 conduct is satisfied only when there is fair notice of the illegality of the practices at issue. ECF 15 No. 215 at 9. Wal-Mart points out that “through its practices, policies, and procedures,” Wal-Mart 16 is “aware of the law and that it deliberately and intentionally tries to comply with the law.” Id. As 17 such, Wal-Mart asserts that it acted in good faith to comply with the law, which is enough to 18 preclude liability. Id. at 8-11.

19 The Court finds that the knowing and intentional requirement of § 226 is akin to a 20 willfulness requirement. That is, in order to be liable, Wal-Mart must have willfully intended to 21 issue wage statements that were out of compliance with § 226. The Court bases this conclusion on 22 the fact that the California Supreme Court has linked the knowing and intentional standard to a 23 willfulness standard; that the majority of state appellate and federal trial courts have done the 24 same; that linking the knowing and intentional standard to willfulness is consistent with another § 25 226 provision; and that the commonly-understood meanings of knowing and intentional support 26 linking knowing and intentional to willfulness.

27 First, the California Supreme Court has linked the “knowing and intentional” standard in

1 Cal. Lab. Code § 216 to the “willfulness” standard in Cal. Lab. Code § 203. Ex parte Trombley, 31
2 Cal. 2d 801, 807-08 (1948). The California Supreme Court found that Cal. Lab. Code § 216, 3 which criminalizes willful failures to pay wages, was constitutional because of the ‘willfulness’ 4 limitation. Id. In coming to its conclusion, the California Supreme Court connected “willfulness”
5 in § 203 to a knowing and intentional standard. Id. In Trombley, the California Supreme Court 6 held:

7           Subdivision (a) [of Section 216], construed together with the Penal 8 Code definition of the word “willful,” makes it a crime for an 9 employer having the ability to pay, knowingly and intentionally to 10 refuse to pay wages which he knows are due. The Court placed a 11 similar construction on section 203 of the Labor Code which imposes 12 penalties where an employer “willfully fails to pay . . . wages of an employee who is discharged or who quits.” In interpreting that section, it was recognized that a dispute in good faith as to whether any wages were due would be a defense to an action for such penalties.

13 31 Cal. 2d at 807-08 (emphasis added); see also Woods v. Vector Marketing Corp., 2015 WL 14 2453202, at *4 (N.D. Cal. May 22, 2015) (“The similarity between ‘knowingly and intentionally’ 15 under Section 226 and ‘willfully’ under Section 203 with respect to their incorporation of a good 16 faith dispute defense is consistent with the Labor Code generally . . . . The California Supreme 17 Court has linked the two standards”).

18           Moreover, although Trombley deals with Cal. Lab. Code § 216, a criminal statute, 19 Trombley itself analogized the criminal statute to Cal. Lab. Code § 203, a civil statute. Id.
20 Similarly, Woods found that the California Supreme Court’s logic applied in the civil context as 21 well. 2015 WL 2453202, at *4. Furthermore, “federal courts sitting in diversity cases, when 22 deciding questions of substantive law, are bound by state court decisions as well as state statutes.”
23 Hanna v. Plumer, 380 U.S. 460, 465 (1965) (internal quotation marks omitted). As the California 24 Supreme Court has linked the knowing and intentional standard to a willfulness standard, this 25 Court must follow the California Supreme Court’s decision.

26           Furthermore, there is no question that the “settled meaning of ‘willful,’ as used in § 203, is 27 that an employer has intentionally failed or refused to perform an act which was required to be

1 done.” Amaral v. Cintas Corp. No. 2, 163 Cal. App. 4th 1157, 1201 (2008). Thus, because 2 “willful” in Cal. Lab. Code § 203 is linked to “knowingly and intentionally,” “knowingly and 3 intentionally” would correspondingly require that the employer “intentionally failed or refused to 4 perform an act which was required to be done.” Id.

5 Second, the majority of courts have found that satisfying the knowing and intentional 6 requirement of § 226 requires something more than simply providing an inadequate wage 7 statement that is not a clerical error or inadvertent mistake. The majority view is that an 8 employer’s good faith belief that it is not violating the California Labor Code precludes a finding 9 of a knowing and intentional violation. For example, the Stafford v. Brink’s, Inc. court noted:

10 Courts have diverged over the degree of intentionality required to 11 establish a violation of § 226. All courts agree that the statute requires 12 the employee to prove something more than a simple failure to 13 provide required information. Some courts have held that provision 14 of an inadequate wage statement is generally knowing and intentional 15 so long as it was not a clerical error or inadvertent mistake. . . . The majority of courts, however, have not taken this expansive view of the knowing-and-intentional requirement. In particular, many courts 16 have held that the employer’s good faith belief that it is not in 17 violation of § 226 precludes a finding of a knowing and intentional 18 violation.

19 2014 WL 12586066, at *5 (C.D. Cal. Aug. 5, 2014) (emphasis added). The Stafford court noted 20 that the majority of courts have rejected the view that the mere provision of an inadequate wage 21 statement that is not a result of clerical error or an inadvertent mistake is enough to give rise to 22 liability under § 226. Id.

23 In the instant case, this Court declines to take the approach for which Plaintiffs advocate 24 and that a minority of courts have adopted, which is that the knowing and intentional requirement 25 can be satisfied by simply showing that an employer provided an inadequate wage statement not 26 as a result of clerical error or inadvertent mistake. Rather, the Court adopts the majority of courts’ 27 view that an employer’s good faith belief that it is not violating § 226 precludes a finding of a 28 knowing and intentional violation. See, e.g., Apodaca v. Costco Wholesale Corp., 2014 WL 2533427, at *3 (C.D. Cal. June 5, 2014) (“Where an employer has a good faith belief that it is not in violation of Section 226, any violation is not knowing and intentional.”); Wright v. Adventures

 2 U.S. Investigations Servs., LLC, 878 F. Supp. 2d 1038, 1047 (N.D. Cal. 2012) (same); Dalton v.
 3 Lee Publ'ns, Inc., 2011 WL 1045107, at *5 (S.D. Cal. Mar. 22, 2011) (same); see also Hoffman v.
 4 Construction Protective Servs., Inc., 293 Fed. App'x 462, 463 (9th Cir. 2008) (“We affirm the 5 district court in this instance because the record contains no evidence that any violation of § 226 6 was knowing and intentional as required under California law. Indeed, the jury’s conclusion that 7 [the defendant] did not intentionally fail to pay [the plaintiff] all wages upon termination of 8 employment supports the conclusion that the evidence does not support a finding of knowing and 9 intentional conduct.”). Indeed, as explained below, § 226’s good faith dispute originates from the 10 good faith dispute under Cal. Lab. Code § 203. Courts have extended § 203’s good faith dispute to 11 § 226. See, e.g., Woods, 2015 WL 2453202, at *3 (noting that courts have interpreted the “‘good 12 faith dispute’ rule . . . to apply to California Labor Code Section 226 wage statement penalties”); 13 Villalpando v. Exel Direct Inc., 2015 WL 5179486, at *37 (N.D. Cal. Sept. 3, 2015) (“[T]he good 14 faith defense that applies to claims under section 203 also applies to Claims asserted under section 15 226 . . . .”); Wright, 2013 WL 1758815, at *9 (“There is no dispute by the parties that there is a 16 comparable good faith defense for § 226 which, similar to § 203, requires knowing and intentional 17 conduct”).

18 Third, the Court’s approach is consistent with the statutory language of § 226(e)(3). Cal.
 19 Lab. Code § 226(e)(3) allows courts “[i]n reviewing for compliance with this section” to 20 determine “whether the employer, prior to an alleged violation, has adopted and is in compliance 21 with a set of policies, procedures, and practices that fully comply with this section.” The statute 22 explicitly gives courts permission to consider the circumstances surrounding a § 226 violation.

23 Fourth, the interpretation that an employer’s good faith belief precludes a finding of a 24 knowing and intentional violation is consistent with the general understanding of “knowing and 25 intentional.” Black’s Law Dictionary defines “knowing” as “[h]aving or showing awareness or 26 understanding.” Knowing, Black’s Law Dictionary (10th ed. 2014). Similarly, “intentional” is 27 defined as “[d]one with the aim of carrying out the act.” Intentional, id. Knowingness and

1 intentionality are scienter requirements. To adopt an interpretation that would essentially read out 2 any scienter requirement from “knowing and intentional” would create tension with the 3 commonly-understood legal meanings of these words. See, e.g., Dalton, 2011 WL 1045107, at *5 4 (describing “knowing and intentional” as the “requisite scienter” requirements for a violation of § 5 226); cf. Johnson v. United States, 260 F. 783, 786 (9th Cir. 1919) (holding that in the context of a 6 criminal statute, “we think the court below correctly defined the word ‘willfully’ as meaning 7 ‘knowingly and intentionally’”).

8 The Court now turns to whether Wal-Mart’s noncompliance with § 226(a) was knowing 9 and intentional. First, the Court analyzes Plaintiffs’ § 226(a)(6) claim regarding Wal-Mart’s 10 statements of final pay. Then, the Court analyzes Plaintiffs’ § 226(a)(9) claim regarding the 11 OVERTIME/INCT line item on Wal-Mart’s wage statements.

12 a. Whether Wal-Mart Knowingly and Intentionally Violated § 226(a)(6) 13 Regarding the Statement of Final Pay

14 Cal. Lab. Code § 226(a)(6) requires wage statements to contain “the inclusive dates of the 15 period for which the employee is paid.” Wal-Mart admits that “it is aware of the law.” ECF No.
16 215 at 9. Yet, Wal-Mart issued and continues to issue deficient statements of final pay. Plaintiffs 17 argue that because the intentional omission of the dates for which the employee is paid from the 18 statement of final pay was and continues to be Wal-Mart’s practice, Wal-Mart is liable. ECF No.
19 214 at 12-13. Wal-Mart argues that a good faith dispute excuses any liability under § 226(a)(6).
20 ECF No. 215 at 10-11. For the reasons stated below, the Court finds that Wal-Mart has shown that 21 a good faith dispute precludes a finding that Wal-Mart knowingly and intentionally violated § 22 226(a)(6) prior to the issuance of the Court’s May 11, 2018 summary judgment order. However, 23 the Court also finds that Wal-Mart knowingly and intentionally violated § 226(a)(6) after the 24 Court’s May 11, 2018 summary judgment order.

25 Wal-Mart employees are paid biweekly, and wage statements are produced biweekly to 26 correspond to the biweekly pay periods. Stipulated Facts at ¶ 10. These biweekly on-cycle wage 27 statements include pay period start and end dates. Id. at ¶ 11. When an employee is terminated, the

1 employee immediately receives all wages earned through the date of termination by check. A 2 statement of final pay accompanies the check. Id. at ¶ 13. The statements of final pay do not 3 include pay period start or end dates. Id. at ¶ 14. After termination, Wal-Mart employees receive 4 one last wage statement, termed a final wage statement. This final wage statement is not issued at 5 the time employees receive their final paycheck or their statement of final pay unless the employee 6 happens to be terminated on the day biweekly wages are paid and a biweekly wage statement is 7 issued. Depending on when an employee is terminated in relation to Wal-Mart’s biweekly wage 8 statement cycle, a terminated employee could potentially wait up to 14 days to receive a final 9 wage statement.

10 The Court now discusses the merits of Plaintiffs’ § 226(a)(6) claim. Admittedly, there is a 11 dearth of statutory, regulatory, and case law guidance as to the metes and bounds of a good faith 12 dispute as applied to Cal. Lab. Code § 226. See, e.g., Wright, 2013 WL 1758815, at *10 (“[T]he 13 legal issue is a close one, and there is no judicial precedence providing clear guidance on the scope 14 of the [good faith] exemption [under § 226] at issue.”). However, Cal. Lab. Code § 203’s good 15 faith dispute does not face the same lack of interpretive guidance as § 226. § 203’s good faith
16 dispute, which applies to § 226’s good faith dispute, see, e.g., Pedroza v. PetSmart, Inc., 2012 WL 17 9506073, at *5 n.6 (C.D. Cal. June 14, 2012) (holding that § 203’s “‘good faith dispute’ defense 18 also applies to Labor Code § 226(e)”), has clear and abundant guidance. Both case law and a 19 regulation, Cal. Code Regs. tit. 8 § 13520, set forth the particularities of a good faith dispute under 20 Cal. Lab. Code § 203.

21 Many courts have applied § 203’s good faith dispute to § 226. For instance, the Woods 22 court noted that courts have interpreted the § 203 “‘good faith dispute’ rule . . . to apply to 23 California Labor Code Section 226 wage statement penalties.” Woods, 2015 WL 2453202, at *3; 24 see also Villalpando, 2015 WL 5179486, at *37 (“[T]he good faith defense that applies to claims 25 under section 203 also applies to Claims asserted under section 226 . . . .”); Wright, 2013 WL 26 1758815, at *9 (“There is no dispute by the parties that there is a comparable good faith defense 27 for § 226 which, similar to § 203, requires knowing and intentional conduct.”).

1 As a result, many courts rely on § 203’s good faith dispute for guidance on how to 2 interpret § 226’s good faith dispute. See, e.g., Dalton, 2011 WL 1045107, at *5 (citing Cal. Code
3 Regs. tit. 8 § 13520, the regulation interpreting the § 203 good faith dispute, in considering a good 4 faith dispute under § 226); Wright, 2013 WL 1758815, at *9 (same); Pedroza, 2012 WL 9506073, 5 at *5 n.6 (C.D. Cal. June 14, 2012) (“Although [Cal. Code Regs. tit. 8] § 13520 only expressly 6 refers to California Labor Code § 203, the ‘good faith dispute’ defense also applies with respect to 7 Labor Code § 226(e.)”); Woods, 2015 WL 2453202, at *3 (same). Therefore, this Court will also 8 look to the § 203 good faith dispute for guidance on the application of a good faith dispute under § 9 226.

10 The regulation for a good faith dispute under § 203, Cal. Code Regs. tit. 8 § 13520, 11 provides as follows:

A ‘good faith dispute’ that any wages are due occurs when an employer presents a defense, based in law or fact which, if successful, would preclude any recover[y] on the part of the employee. The fact that a defense is ultimately unsuccessful will not preclude a finding that a good faith dispute did exist. Defenses presented which, under the circumstances, are unsupported by any evidence, are unreasonable, or are presented in bad faith, will preclude a finding of a ‘good faith dispute.’

12 As interpreted by the case law, a good faith dispute presents in the § 203 context when there is 13 “(1) uncertainty in the law, (2) representations by [an] . . . authority that no further payment [of 14 wages] was required, or (3) the employer’s good faith mistaken belief that wages are not owed 15 grounded in a good faith dispute, which exists when the employer presents a defense based in law 16 or fact which, if successful, would preclude any recovery on the part of the employee.” Diaz v.
17 Grill Concepts Servs., Inc., 23 Cal. App. 5th 859, 868 (2018) (internal citations and quotation 18 marks omitted). Thus, a good faith dispute presents when there is (1) uncertainty in the law; (2) 19 representations by an authority that compliance was not required; or (3) an employer’s good faith

23 24
25
26
27 <sup>2</sup> Courts have interchangeably used a good faith exemption, a good faith defense, and a 28 good faith dispute when analyzing claims under Cal. Lab. Code §§ 203 and 226. See, e.g., Wright, 2013 WL 1758815, at *10 (“[Good faith] exemption . . . .”); id. at *9 (“[G]ood faith defense . . .

1 Wal-Mart relies on prongs (1) and (3) of Diaz—that there was uncertainty in the law, and 2 that it had a good faith mistaken belief that the statement of final pay complied with § 226(a).

3 The Court first discusses the guiding principles behind § 226(a). Then, the Court turns to 4 whether Wal-Mart’s omission of the pay period start and end dates on the statements of final pay 5 was knowing and intentional before the Court’s May 11, 2018 summary judgment order. Lastly, 6 the Court turns to whether Wal-Mart’s omission of information on its statements of final pay was 7 knowing and intentional after the Court’s May 11, 2018 summary judgment order.

8 i. The Principles Behind § 226(a)

9 Cal. Lab. Code § 226(a) governs the information required on “accurate itemized 10 statement[s]” (e.g., wage statements) that an employer issues. Specifically, § 226(a) provides:

11 An employer, semimonthly or at the time of each payment of wages, 12 shall furnish to his or her employee, either as a detachable part of the 13 check, draft, or voucher paying the employee’s wages, or separately 14 if wages are paid by personal check or cash, an accurate itemized 15 statement in writing showing (1) gross wages earned, (2) total hours 16 worked by the employee, except as provided in subdivision (j), (3) the 17 number of piece-rate units earned and any applicable piece rate if the 18 employee is paid on a piece-rate basis, (4) all deductions, provided 19 that all deductions made on written orders of the employee may be 20 aggregated and shown as one item, (5) net wages earned, (6) the 21 inclusive dates of the period for which the employee is paid, (7) the 22 name of the employee and only the last four digits of his or her social 23 security number or an employee identification number other than a 24 social security number, (8) the name and address of the legal entity that is the employer and, if the employer is a farm labor contractor, as defined in subdivision (b) of Section 1682, the name and address of the legal entity that secured the services of the employer, and (9) all applicable hourly rates in effect during the pay period and the corresponding number of hours worked at each hourly rate by the employee and, beginning July 1, 2013, if the employer is a temporary services employer as defined in Section 201.3, the rate of pay and the total hours worked for each temporary services assignment. The deductions made from payment of wages shall be recorded in ink or other indelible form, properly dated, showing the month, day, and year, and a copy of the statement and the record of the deductions shall be kept on file by the employer for at least three years at the 25 .”); Woods, 2015 WL 2453202, at *3 (“Good faith dispute . . .”). All three phrases mean the same 26 thing. As explained above, § 203’s good faith dispute is applied to § 226’s good faith dispute, and 27 Cal. Code Regs. tit. 8 § 13520 interprets § 203’s good faith dispute. This Court chooses to use the phrase “good faith dispute” to be consistent with the Regulation.

1 place of employment or at a central location within the State of 2 California.

3 While amending § 226(a), the California Legislature found that “California employers are 4 ‘chronic violators of wage and hour, safety, and tax laws.’” California Assembly Committee on 5 Labor & Employment, Bill Analysis, A.B. 2509 (Steinberg), April 12, 2000. Given accurate wage 6 information, employees would be more able to identify any violation of wage and hour laws, so 7 California employers would be less likely to attempt to cheat employees.

8 The question before this Court is whether Wal-Mart’s statements of final pay must comply 9 with § 226(a). Courts have held that it is especially vital that the employee receive an accurate 10 itemized statement in writing at the time of termination to avoid “employee confusion over 11 whether they received all wages owed them, difficulty and expense involved in reconstructing pay 12 records, and forcing employees to make mathematical computations to analyze whether the wages 13 paid in fact compensated them for all hours worked.” Elliot v. Spherion Pac. Work, LLC, 572 F.
14 Supp. 2d 1169, 1181 (C.D. Cal. 2008).

15 Moreover, the California Court of Appeal’s opinion in Soto v. Motel 6 Operating, L.P. also 16 supports the conclusion that Wal-Mart’s statement of final pay should comply with § 226. 4 Cal.
17 App. 5th 385, 392 (2016). Specifically, Soto supports the notion that the requirements under § 18 226(a) must be met at the time wages are paid. In Soto the plaintiff argued that § 226(a) required 19 vacation pay to be listed on the wage statement for the period in which it was earned, even if the 20 employee did not receive the vacation pay until a later pay period. Id. at 390. However, the Court 21 in Soto held that employers were required to comply with § 226(a) when wages were paid instead 22 of when wages were accrued in order to document “the paid wages to ensure the employee is fully 23 informed regarding the calculation of those wages.” Id. at 392 (emphasis in original). Otherwise 24 stated, Soto found § 226(a)’s requirements are triggered when wages are paid, as opposed to when 25 wages are earned. Moreover, Soto concerns the same statute—§ 226(a)—as the instant claim.

26 “Where a federal court has jurisdiction by virtue of diversity of citizenship of the parties, 27 the court must follow state law.” Burns v. Int’l Ins. Co., 929 F.2d 1422, 1424 (9th Cir. 1991); see 28 also Hanna, 380 U.S. at 465 (“[F]ederal courts sitting in diversity cases, when deciding questions

1 of substantive law, are bound by state court decisions as well as state statutes.”). Here, the Court
2 sits in diversity. Soto is the only published, extant California case this Court found that discusses 3 when employers must meet the requirements under § 226(a). As Soto concluded that employers 4 must comply with § 226(a) at the time wages are paid instead of when wages are accrued, this 5 Court is bound to follow Soto’s conclusion.

6 As aforementioned, Wal-Mart employees are paid biweekly with corresponding wage 7 statements issued the same day as payment of their biweekly wages. Stipulated Facts at ¶ 10. An 8 employee’s final wage statement is issued on this biweekly pay schedule; it is not issued on the 9 day an employee is terminated and paid final wages unless an employee happens to be terminated 10 on the day biweekly wages are paid and a biweekly wage statement is issued. Thus, Wal-Mart’s 11 issuance of a final wage statement could be delayed by up to 14 days after an employee is 12 terminated, paid his or her final wages, and given the statement of final pay (which does not 13 identify the pay period for which the final wages are paid). This exacerbates the problems an 14 employee faces in determining whether or not his or her final wages are correct. These problems 15 an employee faces inform courts’ interpretations of California Labor Code provisions such as § 16 226 because the California Supreme Court has held that “the state’s labor laws are to be liberally 17 construed in favor of worker protection.” Alvarado, 4 Cal. 5th at 561-62.

18 Furthermore, because the statement of final pay is issued and given to the employee on the 19 day of termination, it is likely the only chance an employee has to access his or her Wal-Mart 20 supervisor to discuss or dispute, outside of litigation, the accuracy of the wages received. Thus, as 21 per Alvarado’s concern for worker protection, it is critical that the statement of final pay identify 22 the paid period for final wages paid to allow an employee to evaluate whether he or she has been 23 correctly paid.

24 Also, Wal-Mart provides computer terminals in its stores for employees to access and print
25 their wage statements. Tr. at 162:15-20. Terminated employees lose access to Wal-Mart’s 26 computer terminals. Because the date an employee is terminated does not necessarily fall on the 27 same date the final wage statement is issued, employees could lose access to their final wage 28

1 statements. For instance, Magadia testified that after he was terminated, he could not log in to 2 Wal-Mart’s computer terminals to look at his wage statements. Id. at 117:11-16 (“Q. And after 3 your termination, was your access to Walmart’s intranet terminated? A. Yes. Q. So after your 4 access to Walmart’s intranet was terminated, were you able to log in to look at your pay stubs at 5 all? A. No.”). Moreover, there was testimony indicating that Magadia did not even receive his 6 final wage statement because his Wal-Mart intranet access was terminated. Id. at 118:5-8 (“Q. So 7 in other words, if your access to Walmart’s intranet was already terminated, you couldn’t have 8 logged on to look at this [final wage] statement; correct? A. Yes.”).

9 In sum, Cal. Lab. Code § 226(a) requires: “[a]n employer, semimonthly or at the time of 10 each payment of wages, shall furnish to his or her employee . . . an accurate itemized statement in 11 writing . . .” (emphasis added). The “accurate itemized wage statement” must be compliant with 12 all the requirements of § 226(a). Here, the itemized statement must include the “inclusive dates of 13 the period for which the employee is paid” pursuant to § 226(a)(6). It is undisputed that at the time 14 of termination, a Wal-Mart employee receives by check all wages earned through the date of 15 termination. Stipulated Facts at ¶ 13. Thus, at the time of termination (i.e., a time when wages are 16 paid), a Wal-Mart employee must receive an itemized statement that includes the dates for which 17 the employee is being paid. That itemized statement takes the form of Wal-Mart’s statement of 18 final pay. The statement of final pay, as discussed above, does not contain the dates for which the 19 employee is being paid. Therefore, in view of the principles behind § 226(a), the Court’s May 11, 20 2018 summary judgment order held that Wal-Mart’s statement of final pay must comply with § 21 226(a)(6) by disclosing the dates for which the employee is being paid. Critically, the summary 22 judgment order is consistent with the California Supreme Court’s statement that “the state’s labor 23 laws are to be liberally construed in favor of worker protection.” Alvarado, 4 Cal. 5th at 561-62.

24 ii. Whether Wal-Mart Knowingly and Intentionally Violated § 226(a)(6)
25 Regarding the Statement of Final Pay Prior to the May 11, 2018 Summary
26 Judgment Order

27 As aforementioned, Wal-Mart argues that there was a good faith dispute because there was 28 uncertainty in the law. Wal-Mart contends that its final wage statement, not the statement of final

1 pay, must comply with § 226(a)(6). ECF No. 86 at 5. The Court finds that under Diaz, there was 2 uncertainty in the law allowing Wal-Mart to claim there was a good faith dispute prior to the 3 Court’s May 11, 2018 summary judgment order. 23 Cal. App. 5th at 868. § 226(a) provides: “[a]n 4 employer, semimonthly or at the time of each payment of wages, shall furnish to his or her 5 employee . . . an accurate itemized statement in writing . . . .” (emphasis added). The statute uses 6 the disjunctive “or,” implying that the provision of “an accurate itemized statement” could take 7 place either semimonthly or at the time wages were paid. By using the disjunctive “or,” § 226(a) 8 implied that employers could be in compliance with the law so long as a compliant wage 9 statement was issued semimonthly, and not necessarily at the time of the payment of any wages.
10 Wal-Mart did issue such a semimonthly pay statement in the form of the final wage statement after 11 the employee’s termination and receipt of his or her statement of final pay.

12 Before this Court issued its May 11, 2018 summary judgment order, ECF No. 121, there 13 was no case law holding that Wal-Mart’s statements of final pay must comply with § 226(a).
14 There was also no case law holding that the statute required issuance of a statement of final pay 15 compliant with § 226(a)(6) regardless of whether a compliant semimonthly wage statement was 16 also issued. Thus, Wal-Mart’s mistaken belief that its statements of final pay were not wage 17 statements that needed to comply with § 226(a) was in good faith because Wal-Mart issued a 18 terminated employee a final wage statement on Wal-Mart’s semimonthly on-cycle pay period 19 schedule in compliance with § 226(a)(6).

20 Therefore, Wal-Mart designed a payment system that, under Wal-Mart’s interpretation, 21 was in compliance with § 226(a)(6). The Court finds that Wal-Mart, owing to its good faith belief, 22 did not knowingly and intentionally violate § 226(a)(6) by issuing deficient statements of final pay 23 before the Court’s May 11, 2018 summary judgment order.

24 iii. Whether Wal-Mart Knowingly and Intentionally Violated § 226(a)(6) 25 Regarding the Statement of Final Pay After the May 11, 2018 Summary
26 Judgment Order

27 The Court next addresses whether Wal-Mart had a good faith belief that Wal-Mart was in 28 compliance with § 226(a)(6) after the Court’s May 11, 2018 summary judgment order.

1 First, the May 11, 2018 summary judgment order stated in no uncertain terms: “the Court
2 finds that the Statement of Final Pay violates § 226(a)(6) because it does not include the pay 3 period start and end dates.” ECF No. 121 at 16. Wal-Mart could no longer have a good faith belief 4 undergirded by uncertainty in the law because at that point, the law of the case was clear: Wal-
5 Mart’s statements of final pay needed to comply with all the requirements of § 226(a). Thus, Wal-
6 Mart should have taken immediate steps to fix the deficient statements of final pay. Yet, Wal-Mart 7 did nothing.

8 Wal-Mart is still issuing deficient statements of final pay, Stipulated Facts at ¶ 14, and 9 belatedly began to inquire about solutions to the problem sometime during the week before 10 Thanksgiving, on the eve of the November 30, 2018 trial, see Tr. at 389:16-391:2 (“A. The payroll 11 information systems department was asked to estimate what kind of effort they thought it might be 12 with what they knew about the ask [to fix Wal-Mart’s deficient statements of final pay and wage 13 statements]. The Court: And what was the date of that request? . . . A. I believe the week before 14 Thanksgiving.”). Although fact discovery closed on May 1, 2018, ECF No. 27 at 2, Plaintiffs did 15 not object to Wal-Mart’s trial testimony about Wal-Mart’s belated remedial inquires to comply 16 with this Court’s May 11, 2018 summary judgment order on the eve of the November 30, 2018 17 trial.

18 Despite the Court’s May 11, 2018 summary judgment order, Wal-Mart has not asked any 19 employee to change Wal-Mart’s deficient statements of final pay. Moreover, Michael Baran, Wal-20 Mart’s technical expert in the people systems payroll area, testified that no change has been made 21 to Wal-Mart’s statements of final pay:

22 Q. Okay. And in Mr. Winn’s cross-examination of you, you testified
23 that you were asked by Walmart to make a change as to Walmart’s 24 wage statements regarding the OVERTIME/INCT and statements of 25 final pay. Do you recall that testimony? . . .
26 A. I was asked about the change. I wasn’t asked to make the change.
27 Q. Do you know who was asked to make the change at Walmart?
28 A. I don’t believe any single individual that I’m aware of.
Q. Do you know if, if any department was asked to implement the changes you testified to during your cross-examination by Mr. Winn?
A. No one has started to implement anything as you said . . . The payroll information systems department was asked to estimate what

1 kind of effort they thought it might be with what they knew about the ask.
2 Id. at 389:16-390:14 (emphasis added). The payroll information systems department was merely 3 asked to “estimate” the effort needed to make changes. Id. So, for 6 months after the Court’s May 4 11, 2018 summary judgment order issued, Wal-Mart took no steps to remedy the problem. Wal-5 Mart’s belated and half-hearted remedial inquiries on the eve of trial appeared to be motivated by 6 a desire to create evidence for trial rather than a sincere effort to correct the deficient statements of 7 final pay.

8 Second, Wal-Mart did not have a good faith mistaken belief that its statement of final pay 9 complied with § 226(a)(6). The two pieces of evidence of good faith upon which Wal-Mart relies 10 are that Wal-Mart’s statement of final pay identifies the date on which the statement is issued, and 11 that Wal-Mart conducts exit interviews. However, the fact that the statement of final pay includes 12 its issuance date does not demonstrate that Wal-Mart attempted in good faith to comply with § 13 226(a)(6). After the Court’s May 11, 2018 summary judgment order, Wal-Mart knew that its 14 statement of final pay violated § 226(a)(6), but Wal-Mart still failed to add the pay period start and 15 end dates for final wages paid to the statement of final pay. Wal-Mart’s inaction despite being on 16 notice of the illegality of its practice of omitting the pay period dates from its statement of final 17 pay belies Wal-Mart’s purported good faith mistaken belief that Wal-Mart was in compliance with 18 § 226(a)(6).

19 Moreover, Wal-Mart’s “evidence” of good faith actually acknowledges that Wal-Mart fails 20 to comply with § 226(a)(6). Wal-Mart is essentially saying that employees might be able to get the 21 information required under § 226(a)(6) from their exit interview. However, the California Labor 22 Code does not excuse a violation of § 226(a)(6) simply because an employee might get the 23 information required under § 226(a)(6) from other sources. Thus, there is no evidence, factually or 24 legally, of a good faith mistaken belief.

25 Therefore, the Court finds Wal-Mart liable for violating § 226(a)(6) after May 11, 2018 26 because it knowingly and intentionally issued deficient statements of final pay without a good 27 faith dispute.

b. Whether Wal-Mart Knowingly and Intentionally Violated § 226(a)(9)
Regarding the OVERTIME/INCT Line Item

2 Cal. Lab. Code § 226(a)(9) requires wage statements to contain “all applicable hourly rates
3 in effect during the pay period and the corresponding number of hours worked at each hourly rate 4 by the employee.” Plaintiffs have met their burden of showing that Wal-Mart knowingly and 5 intentionally failed to include the applicable hourly rates and corresponding hours worked for the 6 OVERTIME/INCT line item. Like for Plaintiffs’ § 226(a)(6) claim above, Wal-Mart admits that 7 “it is aware of the law.” ECF No. 215 at 9. Yet, Wal-Mart issued and continues to issue deficient 8 wage statements omitting the required hours and hourly rate for the OVERTIME/INCT line item.
9 Plaintiffs argue that so long as an employer such as Wal-Mart issues a deficient wage statement 10 not due to a clerical error or inadvertent mistake, the employer is liable. ECF No. 214 at 8-9. Wal-11 Mart argues that a good faith dispute excuses any liability under § 226(a)(9). ECF No. 215 at 9-10.

12 As aforementioned, the § 226 good faith inquiry mirrors the § 203 good faith inquiry. See, 13 e.g., Woods, 2015 WL 2453202, at *4 (“The similarity between ‘knowing and intentionally’ under 14 Section 226 and ‘willfully’ under Section 203 with respect to their incorporation of a good faith 15 dispute defense is consistent with the Labor Code generally . . .”). Also as discussed above, a 16 good faith dispute presents when there is (1) uncertainty in the law; (2) representations by an 17 authority that compliance was not required; or (3) an employer’s good faith mistaken belief 18 grounded in a good faith dispute. Diaz, 23 Cal. App. 5th at 868.

19 Here, Wal-Mart relies upon the first and third prongs of a good faith dispute because Wal-20 Mart argues that there is uncertainty in the law, and that Wal-Mart’s actions taken with respect to 21 informing associates about how the MyShare Incentive Awards are included in the regular rate of 22 pay excuse Wal-Mart’s failure to comply with § 226(a)(9). ECF No. 215 at 10.

23 First, Wal-Mart argues that the California Court of Appeal’s partially unpublished decision 24 in Fabio Canales v. Wells Fargo Bank, N.A., Case No. B276127 (2018), issued on May 30, 2018
25 and judicially noticed by the Court at ECF No. 157 at 4 n.1, supports Wal-Mart’s position that § 26 226(a)(9) does not apply to “additional wages that were earned as overtime pay based on 27 nondiscretionary bonuses being spread over the hours worked during the bonus period.” ECF No.

1 131-1 at 12-13.<sup>3</sup> Canales could not have provided support for Wal-Mart’s practice of issuing 2 deficient wage statements. Wal-Mart relies on the unpublished portion of Canales, and pursuant to 3 Civil Local Rule 3-4(e), “[a]ny order or opinion that is designated” as unpublished “may not be 4 cited to this Court, either in written submissions or oral argument, except when relevant under the 5 doctrines of law of the case, res judicata, or collateral estoppel.”

6 Moreover, Wal-Mart could not have relied on Canales in issuing deficient wage statements 7 that lacked the hours worked or applicable hourly rates for the OVERTIME/INCT line item.
8 Canales issued on May 30, 2018, after this Court’s May 11, 2018 summary judgment order 9 finding that “Wal-Mart’s wage statements violate § 226(a)(9),” ECF No. 121 at 14. Thus, by the 10 time Canales issued, the law of the case was well-established: Wal-Mart’s wage statements 11 needed to comply with § 226(a)(9).

12 Moreover, Wal-Mart has always omitted the rate or hours worked for the 13 OVERTIME/INCT line item information from its pay statements. Tr. at 137:20-22 (“Q. As far as 14 you know, has Walmart ever identified the rate or hours on the wage statement for the 15 OVERTIME/INCT line item? A. I’m not aware of that.”). Thus, Canales—issued on May 30, 16 2018—postdates Wal-Mart’s practice of issuing deficient wage statements. As Canales postdates 17 Wal-Mart’s practice of issuing deficient wage statements, Canales could not have provided 18 support for Wal-Mart’s practice of issuing deficient wage statements. In addition, the relevant 19 portion of Canales is unpublished, and pursuant to Civil Local Rule 3-4(e), “[a]ny order or 20 opinion that is designated” as unpublished “may not be cited to this Court, either in written 21 submissions or oral argument, except when relevant under the doctrines of law of the case, res 22 judicata, or collateral estoppel.”

23 Additionally, there is an earlier published California Court of Appeal case, Soto, with 24 which Canales conflicts, a conflict Canales itself acknowledged but never reconciled. ECF No.

26 _____
27 <sup>3</sup> Because the unpublished portion of Canales is available neither on Westlaw nor LexisNexis, the 28 Court relies on the document Wal-Mart submitted in its request for judicial notice, ECF No. 131-1, which was granted, ECF No. 157 at 4 n.1.

1 131-1 at 13. As aforementioned, in Soto, the plaintiff argued that § 226(a) required vacation pay to 2 be listed on the wage statement for the period in which it was earned, even if the employee did not 3 receive the vacation pay until a later pay period. 4 Cal. App. 5th at 390. The Soto defendant, like 4 Plaintiffs here, argued instead that vacation pay had to be listed in the employee’s wage statement 5 when the employee actually received it. Id. Soto held that employers were required to comply with 6 § 226(a) when wages were paid instead of when wages were accrued in order to document “the 7 paid wages to ensure the employee is fully informed regarding the calculation of those wages.” Id.
8 at 392 (emphasis in original).

9 Also, as the Court held in its order denying Wal-Mart’s motion for partial summary 10 judgment, ECF No. 157, Canales is also at odds with the purpose behind § 226(a)(9). Courts have 11 described the purpose of § 226(a)(9) as “requiring more information and disclosure to employees.”
12 See, e.g., York, 2009 WL 8617536, at *10. Moreover, a reading of a statute that would exempt 13 employers from any obligation to disclose hours and rates for a category of overtime, as Canales 14 holds, is difficult to reconcile with a California labor statute whose avowed goal is to “insure that 15 employees are adequately informed of compensation received and are not shortchanged by their 16 employers.” Soto, 4 Cal. App. 5th at 393 (quoting Cal. Assembly Comm. on Labor and 17 Employment Analysis of Sen. Bill No. 1255 (2011-2012 Reg. Sess.)).

18 In sum, Canales does not create any uncertainty in California labor laws, which as the 19 California Supreme Court has held, “are to be liberally construed in favor of worker protection.”
20 Alvarado, 4 Cal. 5th at 561-62. Thus, there was no good-faith reliance on Canales by Wal-Mart.

21 Moreover, as aforementioned, the Court’s May 11, 2018 summary judgment order placed 22 Wal-Mart on notice that its wage statements were noncompliant with § 226(a)(9). ECF No. 121 at 23 14. Yet Wal-Mart is still issuing deficient wage statements and belatedly began to inquire about 24 solutions to the problem sometime during the week before Thanksgiving, on the eve of the 25 November 30, 2018 trial. See Tr. at 369:14-19; id. at 389:16-391:2. Michael Baran, Wal-Mart’s 26 technical expert in the people systems payroll area, testified that no change has been made to Wal-27 Mart’s wage statements regarding the OVERTIME/INCT line item and that Wal-Mart has not

1 requested anyone at Wal-Mart to make any such change:

2 Q. Okay. And in Mr. Winn's cross-examination of you, you testified
3 that you were asked by Walmart to make a change as to Walmart's
4 wage statements regarding the OVERTIME/INCT and statements of 5 final pay. Do you recall that testimony? . . . .

6 A. I was asked about the change. I wasn't asked to make the change.

7 Q. Do you know who was asked to make the change at Walmart?

8 A. I don't believe any single individual that I'm aware of.

9 Q. Do you know if, if any department was asked to implement the 10 changes you testified to during your cross-examination by Mr. Winn?

11 A. No one has started to implement anything as you said . . . . The 12 payroll information systems department was asked to estimate what
14 ask.

15 Id. at 389:16-390:14 (emphasis added). Michael Baran also testified that Wal-Mart has not figured 16 out what change to make: "Q. Has Walmart been looking into whether to modify its wage 17 statements to display rates and hours that correspond to the overtime incentive payment? A. Yes.
18 Q. Has it figured out how to do that yet? A. No, we have not." Tr. at 369:14-19. So, for 6 months 19 after the Court's May 11, 2018 summary judgment order issued, Wal-Mart took no steps to 20 remedy the problem. Wal-Mart's belated and half-hearted remedial inquiries on the eve of trial 21 appeared to be motivated by a desire to create evidence for trial rather than a sincere effort to 22 correct the deficient statements of final pay.

23 Second, Wal-Mart has not demonstrated a good faith mistaken belief that it complied with 24 § 226(a)(9) under the third prong of the good faith analysis (an employer's good faith mistaken 25 belief grounded in a good faith dispute). § 226(a)(9) requires that wage statements contain "all 26 applicable hourly rates in effect during the pay period and the corresponding number of hours 27 worked at each hourly rate by the employee." Wal-Mart's argument that as evidence of its good 28 faith, it informed associates that "[e]arned MyShare Incentive Awards will be included in the regular rate of pay when calculating overtime for the incentive quarter" and "flags this for associates in its written MyShare Quarterly Incentive Plan Program," Ex. 125-7; ECF No. 215 at 10, is unpersuasive and does not implicate a good faith dispute. Wal-Mart's MyShare Quarterly Incentive Plan Program (Exhibit 125) states that "[q]ualifying participants employed in an eligible facility may receive a MyShare incentive award." This statement is emblematic of the very high

1 level of generality the MyShare Quarterly Incentive Plan Program describes how the 2 OVERTIME/INCT line item is calculated. In other words, Wal-Mart’s MyShare Quarterly 3 Incentive Plan Program fails to disclose employees’ hourly rates and corresponding hours worked 4 for the OVERTIME/INCT line item, as required by § 226(a)(9). The purpose behind enforcing § 5 226(a)(9) is so “that employees are adequately informed of compensation received and are not 6 shortchanged by their employers.” Soto, 4 Cal. App. 5th at 393. Yet, Wal-Mart’s MyShare 7 Quarterly Incentive Plan Program does not come close to satisfying the purpose of § 226(a)(9), 8 which is to give employees more information about line items in wage statements so that 9 employees have sufficient information to identify potential issues with the paid wages.

10 Therefore, the Court concludes that Wal-Mart is liable for violating § 226(a)(9) because it 11 knowingly and intentionally issued wage statements with the OVERTIME/INCT line item.

12 Having found that Wal-Mart knowingly and intentionally violated both § 226(a)(6) 13 (regarding the statement of final pay claim) after the Court’s May 11, 2018 summary judgment 14 order, and § 226(a)(9) (regarding the OVERTIME/INCT claim), the Court turns to the third prong 15 of the inquiry: whether the Plaintiffs suffered injury.

16 2. Whether Plaintiffs Suffered Injury from Wal-Mart’s Omissions from the 17 Statement of Final Pay and the OVERTIME/INCT Line Item

18 First, the Court discusses whether Plaintiffs suffered any injury because Wal-Mart omitted:
19 (1) the pay period dates from the statement of final pay, and (2) the hours worked and rate paid 20 from the OVERTIME/INCT line item. Then, the Court turns to whether Magadia has Article III 21 standing to bring his claims for violations of Cal. Lab. Code §§ 226(a)(6) (regarding the statement 22 of final pay claim) and 226(a)(9) (regarding the OVERTIME/INCT claim).

23 Wal-Mart contends that Magadia suffered no injury because he admitted as such in his 24 testimony: “Q. Have you been injured in any way because of the pay stubs you received? A. Oh.
25 No.” Tr. at 99:17-19. Magadia also admitted that he did not know of anyone else who was 26 confused by any of Wal-Mart’s pay statements: “Q. Are you aware of any associate who has been 27 confused by any statement of pay that they’ve received from Walmart? A. No.” Id. at 98:18-20.

1 On the other hand, Plaintiffs argue that because Plaintiffs cannot readily determine from the face 2 of the final statement of pay or their wage statements the information required under § 226(a), 3 they have suffered injury.

4 Injury under § 226 is statutorily defined by the California Labor Code:

5 An employee is deemed to suffer injury for purposes of this 6 subdivision if the employer fails to provide accurate and complete 7 information [on its wage statements] as required by any one or more 8 of items (1) to (9), inclusive, of subdivision (a) and the employee 9 cannot promptly and easily determine from the wage statement alone 10 . . . any of the other information required to be provided on the 11 itemized wage statement pursuant to items . . . (6) and (9) of 12 subdivision (a).”

13 Cal. Lab. Code § 226(e)(2)(B). The California Labor Code statutorily defines injury as the 14 inability to “promptly and easily determine from the wage statement alone” items required to be 15 disclosed on a wage statement pursuant to other portions of the statute (i.e., the hours worked and 16 hourly rate paid). Id. “Promptly and easily determine” is further defined as whether “a reasonable 17 person would be able to readily ascertain the information without reference to other documents or 18 information.” Cal. Lab. Code § 226(e)(2)(C).

19 Here, Magadia testified that he could not determine the start and end dates from the 20 statement of final pay (relating to Plaintiffs’ § 226(a)(6) claim). Tr. at 102:12-22. Todd Stokes, 21 Wal-Mart’s divisional human resources director, conceded this fact in his testimony: “Q. Looking 22 at the statement of final pay itself, without using any other wage statements or any calendar or 23 anything else, can an employee determine what pay period he or she is being paid for on the 24 statement of final pay? A. They cannot determine the pay period specifically off this document.”
25 Id. at 140:16-21

26 Moreover, Magadia testified that he cannot determine the rate and hours for the 27 OVERTIME/INCT line item (relating to Plaintiffs’ § 226(a)(9) claim). Id. at 95:8-10. Stokes 28 conceded that employees could not determine the rate paid and hours worked for the OVERTIME/INCT line item as well: “Q. If you look at an OVERTIME/INCT line item on a particular pay stub, is an employee able to tell how the OVERTIME/INCT is calculated without 1 looking at anything else? . . . . A. I would say no.” Id. at 137:14-19.

2 As such, the Court finds that Magadia’s testimony establishes that he has suffered injury 3 for his claims under § 226(a)(6) (regarding the statement of final pay) and § 226(a)(9) (regarding 4 the OVERTIME/INCT line item). Magadia’s testimony is corroborated by the testimony of 5 Stokes, Wal-Mart’s divisional human resources director. Next, the Court discusses Wal-Mart’s 6 contention that Magadia does not have Article III standing.

7 a. Whether Magadia Possesses Article III Standing

8 Wal-Mart contends that Magadia does not have Article III standing pursuant to Spokeo, 9 Inc. v. Robins, 136 S. Ct. 1540 (2016), a case that deals with the injury in fact requirement of 10 Article III standing. In Spokeo, the United States Supreme Court reiterated two longstanding 11 principles governing the injury in fact analysis. First, the Supreme Court confirmed that for an 12 injury to be “concrete,” it must be “de facto,” meaning that it is “real,” and not “abstract.” Spokeo, 13 136 S. Ct. at 1548. However, an injury need not be “tangible” in order to be “concrete,” and 14 intangible injuries may constitute injury in fact. Id. at 1549.

15 Second, the Spokeo Court reaffirmed that the legislature may “elevat[e]” injuries 16 “previously inadequate in law” to legally cognizable “concrete” injuries. Id. at 1549 (quoting 17 Lujan v. Defenders of Wildlife, 504 U.S. 555, 578 (1992)); see also Lujan, 504 U.S. at 580 18 (Kennedy, J., concurring) (“Congress has the power to define injuries and articulate chains of 19 causation that will give rise to a case or controversy where none existed before.”). In other words, 20 the violation of a right granted by statute may be sufficient to constitute injury in fact, without 21 alleging “any additional harm beyond the one Congress has identified.” Spokeo, 136 S. Ct. at 22 1549; see also Warth v. Seldin, 422 U.S. 490, 500 (1975) (stating that the “actual or threatened
23 injury required by Art. III may exist solely by virtue of statutes creating legal rights, the invasion 24 of which creates standing” (internal quotation marks omitted)). Justice Thomas, concurring in 25 Spokeo, put the principle plainly: “Congress can create new private rights and authorize private 26 plaintiffs to sue based simply on the violation of those private rights,” such that “[a] plaintiff 27 seeking to vindicate a statutorily created private right need not allege actual harm beyond the

1 invasion of that private right.” Spokeo, 136 S. Ct. at 1553 (Thomas, J., concurring).

2 The Ninth Circuit, in interpreting Spokeo, has held that in evaluating a claim of harm, there 3 are two inquiries. “(1) [W]hether the statutory provisions at issue were established to protect [] 4 concrete interests (as opposed to purely procedural rights), and if so, (2) whether the specific 5 procedural violations alleged in this case actually harm, or present a material risk of harm to, such 6 interests.” Robins v. Spokeo, Inc., 867 F.3d 1108, 1113 (9th Cir. 2017) (hereinafter Spokeo II). The 7 Court addresses each inquiry in turn.

8 First, the statutory provisions were established to protect the concrete interests of 9 employees who have a legitimate right of access to their pay information to protect their interests.
10 These are real rights, rather than purely legal or procedural rights. As an example, in amending § 11 226(a) to include § 226(a)(9), the provision implicated by Plaintiffs’ claim regarding the 12 OVERTIME/INCT line item, the California Senate bill analysis incorporated comments that 13 employees “are often provided little information about their wages,” and that “this bill will remedy 14 that problem.” York v. Starbucks Corp., 2009 WL 8617536, at *10 (C.D. Cal. Dec. 3, 2009) 15 (quoting California Senate Judiciary Committee, Bill Analysis, A.B. 2509 (Steinberg), August 8, 16 2000). The York court described the purpose behind the addition of § 226(a)(9) as “requiring more 17 information and disclosure to employees, not less” to avoid employers cheating their employees 18 out of legitimately-earned wages. Id. Analogously, the same can be said of § 226(a)(6), implicated 19 by Plaintiffs’ statement of final pay claim, which requires more information disclosed to 20 employees, not less.

21 In sum, it seems the animating purpose behind § 226(a), with all its provisions regarding 22 what must be disclosed on wage statements, is employee protection. Intertwined with this purpose 23 is an element of deterrence, as “California employers are ‘chronic violators of wage and hour, 24 safety, and tax laws.’” Id. (quoting California Assembly Committee on Labor & Employment, Bill 25 Analysis, A.B. 2509 (Steinberg), April 12, 2000). Similar sentiments were echoed when the 26 California Legislature amended § 226(a) to require “accurate” itemized wage statements: “During 27 oversight hearings conducted by the Assembly Committee on Labor and Employment in 2001, the

1 Committee learned that labor law violations are rampant in the underground economy, and that 2 state labor law enforcement is minimal.” California Assembly Committee on Labor &
 3 Employment, Bill Analysis, A.B. 276 (Koretz), March 13, 2003. Given more wage information, 4 employees would be more able to identify any violation of wage and hour laws, so California 5 employers would be less likely to attempt to cheat employees. In this context, it makes sense that 6 the California legislature might protect against such harms without requiring a higher threshold 7 showing of injury to the employee.

8 Analogously, in Spokeo II, the Fair Credit Reporting Act’s (“FCRA”) provisions were at 9 issue. 867 F.3d at 1114. The Ninth Circuit had “little difficulty” concluding that the interests 10 protected by the FCRA were “real, rather than purely legal creations.” Id. This is because 11 inaccurate credit reports posed a “threat to a consumer’s livelihood. . . . Congress could have seen 12 fit to guard against that threat . . . especially in light of the difficulty the consumer might have in 13 learning exactly who has accessed (or who will access) his credit report.” Id. The logic behind 14 Spokeo II sounds very similar to the logic espoused by the California legislature in amending § 15 226(a). Both the FCRA and Cal. Lab. Code § 226(a) are concerned with protecting a group of 16 people whose livelihoods would be threatened by inaccurate information and would otherwise 17 have difficulty accessing such information.

18 Second, the specific procedural violations alleged in this case—violations of § 226(a)(6) 19 (regarding the statement of final pay claim) and § 226(a)(9) (regarding the OVERTIME/INCT 20 claim)—actually harm the concrete interests of employees in having access to their wage 21 information. In Spokeo II, the Ninth Circuit noted that the plaintiff’s credit report “falsely reported 22 that he is married with children, that he is in his 50s, that he is employed in a professional or 23 technical field, that he has a graduate degree, and that his wealth level is higher than it is.” 867 24 F.3d at 1117. It was “clear” to the Spokeo II court that these facts “are substantially more likely to 25 harm [plaintiff’s] concrete interests than the Supreme Court’s example of an incorrect zip code.”
 26 Id. Likewise, omissions of pay period dates and the number of hours worked and at what rates, as 27 is the case here, strike at the heart of the intent behind the California Legislature’s efforts to

1 protect employees. The Court first discusses the harm to Plaintiffs’ concrete interests under § 2 226(a)(6) (regarding the statement of final pay claim), then under § 226(a)(9) (regarding the 3 OVERTIME/INCT claim).

4 i. Harm to Plaintiffs’ Concrete Interests under § 226(a)(6) (regarding the 5 statement of final pay claim)

6 In relation to Plaintiffs’ claim under § 226(a)(6), it is critical that the statement of final pay 7 contain accurate information regarding “the inclusive dates of the period for which the employee 8 is paid” because the statement is issued on the day the employee is terminated. Cal. Lab. Code §
9 226(a)(6). The omission of the dates from the statements of final pay may make it more difficult 10 for employees to determine the accuracy of the information presented. Other such injuries might 11 include “employee confusion over whether they received all wages owed them, difficulty and 12 expense involved in reconstructing pay records, and forcing employees to make mathematical 13 computations to analyze whether the wages paid in fact compensated them for all hours worked.”
14 Elliot, 572 F. Supp. 2d at 1181. Moreover, after employees are terminated, it presumably becomes 15 more difficult for employees to correct incorrect information on their wage statements or 16 challenge their final wages outside the context of litigation. Thus, it is important that the dates of 17 pay appear on the statement of final pay, so employees can raise any issues during their exit 18 interviews or with their supervisor on the employees’ last day of employment.

19 Even Wal-Mart’s own witness, Todd Stokes, concedes that Wal-Mart employees suffer the 20 statutorily-defined injury by being unable to determine from the face of the statement of final pay 21 the pay period for which employees are being paid. The California Labor Code statutorily defines 22 injury as the inability to “promptly and easily determine from the wage statement alone” items 23 required to be disclosed on a wage statement. Cal. Lab. Code § 226(e)(2)(B). Stokes testified: “Q.
24 Looking at the statement of final pay itself, without using any other wage statements or any 25 calendar or anything else, can an employee determine what pay period he or she is being paid for 26 on the statement of final pay? A. They cannot determine the pay period specifically off this 27 document.” Tr. at 140:16-21. Magadia also testified as to his confusion stemming from his

1 inability to determine the start and end dates from the statement of final pay. Magadia stated: “Q.
2 Okay. So you cannot tell me what the dates of your pay period are [on the statement of final pay]; 3 is that correct? A. Yes.” Id. at 82:23-25.

4 ii. Harm to Plaintiffs’ Concrete Interests under § 226(a)(9) (regarding the 5 OVERTIME/INCT claim)

6 In relation to Plaintiffs’ claim under § 226(a)(9), without sufficient information on their 7 wage statements, Plaintiffs would not be able to tell if they are owed additional money from their 8 employer and if there are mistakes on their wage statements. This is especially important given 9 that Wal-Mart employees’ OVERTIME/INCT line item is calculated over a quarterly basis, 10 meaning that many months elapse until employees are able to see the line item on their wage 11 statements. Without the requisite “applicable hourly rates in effect . . . and the corresponding 12 number of hours worked at each hourly rate by the employee,” it is especially difficult for 13 employees to assess whether they have been paid correctly. Cal. Lab. Code § 226(a)(9).

14 Stokes also concedes that Wal-Mart employees suffer the statutorily-defined injury by 15 being unable to determine from the wage statement alone the hours worked and rate paid for the 16 OVERTIME/INCT line item (regarding Plaintiffs’ claim under § 226(a)(9)). Stokes testified: “Q.
17 If you look at an OVERTIME/INCT line item on a particular pay stub, is an employee able to tell 18 how the OVERTIME/INCT is calculated without looking at anything else? . . . . A. I would say 19 no.” Tr. at 137:14-19. Furthermore, Magadia testified as to his confusion stemming from his 20 inability to determine the rate and hours for the OVERTIME/INCT line item. Magadia testified: 21 “Q. Are you confused by the way those, either of those two items are displayed on the wage 22 statement? A. Yes, sir. Q. What is confusing about them? A. Because I don’t see the, for 23 OVERTIME/INCT, I don’t see the rate and hours.” Id. at 95:5-10.

24 The cases Wal-Mart cites in its post-trial briefing are inapposite. In support of Wal-Mart’s 25 claim that Plaintiffs must allege monetary damages to allege injury, Wal-Mart cites Suarez v. Bank 26 of Am. Corp., which held that a plaintiff’s allegation of monetary damages due to a violation of § 27 226 passed Rule 12(b)(6) muster. 2018 WL 3659302, at *12 (N.D. Cal. Aug. 2, 2018). However,

1 the United States Supreme Court was clear that an injury need not be “tangible” in order to be 2 “concrete,” and intangible injuries may constitute injury in fact. Spokeo, 136 S. Ct. at 1549. In the 3 instant case, Plaintiffs do not claim they suffer monetary damages, but that does not mean they 4 have therefore alleged an intangible injury that deprives them of Article III standing.

5 In addition, Wal-Mart cites Mie Yang v. Francesca’s Collections, Inc., where a § 226 claim 6 was dismissed at the pleadings stage because the “injury requirement cannot be satisfied simply 7 because one of the nine itemized requirements in in section 226(a) is missing from a wage 8 statement.” 2018 WL 984637, at *7 (N.D. Cal. Feb. 20, 2018) (internal quotation marks omitted).
9 Wal-Mart’s representation of what Mie Yang holds is mistaken. Mie Yang states that “the 10 deprivation of that information [that is required under § 226(a)], standing alone[,] is not a 11 cognizable injury.” Id. (emphasis added). Here, Plaintiffs are not arguing that the deprivation of 12 information required to be disclosed on a wage statement pursuant to § 226(a) is the sole injury 13 they have suffered. Plaintiffs have demonstrated that they suffer from the statutorily-defined injury 14 of the inability to “promptly and easily determine from the wage statement alone” items required 15 to be disclosed on a wage statement. Cal. Lab. Code § 226(e)(2)(B). Here, Magadia testified that 16 he could not determine the start and end dates of the pay period for which he was being paid from 17 the statement of final pay (relating to Plaintiffs’ § 226(a)(6) claim). Tr. at 102:12-22. Moreover, 18 Magadia testified that he cannot determine the rate and hours for the OVERTIME/INCT line item 19 (relating to Plaintiffs’ § 226(a)(9) claim). Id. at 95:8-10.

20 In addition, other courts have held that so long as a plaintiff suffers from the statutorily-21 defined injury, that is sufficient to state a claim for damages under § 226(e). Brewer v. General 22 Nutrition Corp., 2015 WL 5072039, at *8-9 (N.D. Cal. Aug. 27, 2015) (holding that satisfying the 23 statutorily-defined injury requirement is sufficient to show injury); Willner v. Manpower Inc., 35 24 F. Supp. 3d 1116, 1136 (N.D. Cal. 2014) (“The Court concludes that, based on the wage 25 statements submitted by Manpower, an employee cannot determine from the wage statements 26 alone either the start date of the pay period or Manpower’s address, as discussed above.

27 Accordingly, the evidence before the Court establishes that Willner suffered injury within the 1 meaning of Section 226(e).”).

2 As discussed above, Magadia’s confusion meets the requirements of injury in fact under 3 Spokeo and is a sufficient showing of injury under Cal. Lab. Code § 226(e) relating to Plaintiffs’ 4 claims under both § 226(a)(6) (regarding the statement of final pay) and § 226(a)(9) (regarding the 5 OVERTIME/INCT line item).

6 In sum, Plaintiffs have standing to pursue both claims under both § 226(a)(6) and § 7 226(a)(9) because they have suffered the statutorily-defined injury under § 226(e)(2)(B). Spokeo
8 poses no obstacle to the Plaintiffs’ standing here.

9 3. Summary

10 a. § 226(a)(6) (regarding the statement of final pay claim)

11 The Court finds that (1) Wal-Mart failed to provide compliant wage statements under Cal.
12 Lab. Code § 226(a)(6), (2) Wal-Mart’s failure to do so was “knowing and intentional” only after 13 May 11, 2018, and (3) Plaintiffs were injured as a result. Thus, Wal-Mart is liable for statutory 14 damages under Cal. Lab. Code § 226(e) after May 11, 2018, and PAGA penalties, discussed 15 below.

16 b. § 226(a)(9) (regarding the OVERTIME/INCT claim)

17 The Court finds that (1) Wal-Mart failed to provide compliant wage statements under Cal.
18 Lab. Code § 226(a)(9), (2) Wal-Mart’s failure to do so was “knowing and intentional” after 19 December 2, 2015,<sup>4</sup> and (3) Plaintiffs were injured as a result. Thus, Wal-Mart is liable for 20 statutory damages under Cal. Lab. Code § 226(e) and PAGA penalties, discussed below.

21 4. Damages

22 Plaintiffs request § 226(e) statutory damages as well as PAGA penalties for Wal-Mart’s 23 violation of § 226. First, the Court discusses § 226(e) statutory damages and PAGA penalties for 24 Wal-Mart’s violations of § 226(a)(9), Plaintiffs’ OVERTIME/INCT claim. Second, the Court 25 discusses § 226(e) statutory damages and PAGA penalties for Wal-Mart’s violations of § 26

27 _____
28 <sup>4</sup> December 2, 2015 is the statute of limitations date for Plaintiffs’ actions brought under § 226.

1 226(a)(6), Plaintiffs’ statement of final pay claim. After a discussion of the damages, the Court 2 addresses Wal-Mart’s arguments for why Plaintiffs’ recovery here should be reduced or 3 eliminated.

4 a. Damages for Violation of § 226(a)(9) (regarding the OVERTIME/INCT claim) 5 The Court first discusses § 226(e) statutory damages for Wal-Mart’s violation of § 6 226(a)(9), Plaintiffs’ OVERTIME/INCT claim, then turns to PAGA penalties.

7 i. § 226(e) Statutory Damages

8 Dr. Kriegler calculated § 226(e) statutory damages for Wal-Mart’s violation of § 226(a)(9)
9 (regarding the OVERTIME/INCT line item) to total $48,046,000. The Court found Wal-Mart 10 liable for violating § 226(a)(9) after the statute of limitations date of December 2, 2015. Therefore, 11 the Court awards the OVERTIME/INCT Wage Statement class $48,046,000 in § 226(e) statutory 12 damages for Wal-Mart’s violation of § 226(a)(9).

13 Next, the Court addresses the award of PAGA penalties.

14 ii. PAGA Penalties

15 Plaintiffs request $131,427,750 in PAGA penalties for the OVERTIME/INCT Wage 16 Statement Class for Wal-Mart’s violation of § 226(a)(9). Ex. 201-7.

17 Wal-Mart argues that if the Court were to award any PAGA penalties, they should be 18 reduced from the maximum amount requested so that the penalties are not unjust, arbitrary, and 19 oppressive. ECF No. 215 at 15. Moreover, Wal-Mart argues that any PAGA award should be 20 proportional to actual damages and any non-PAGA penalties awarded, and take into consideration
21 whether Wal-Mart acted willfully or in good faith. Id. The Court believes that Wal-Mart’s 22 arguments have some merit.

23 The California Labor Code grants courts discretion to reduce a PAGA penalty if, “based on 24 the facts and circumstances of the particular case, to do otherwise would result in an award that is 25 unjust, arbitrary and oppressive, or confiscatory.” Cal. Lab. Code § 2699(e)(2); see also Romo v.
26 GMRI, Inc., 2014 WL 11320647, at *7 (C.D. Cal. Feb. 18, 2014) (“The court retains discretion
27 over awards under a PAGA claim . . . .”); Cardenas v. McLane Foodservice, Inc., 2011 WL

1 379413, at *4 (C.D. Cal. Jan. 31, 2011) (“The PAGA text also provides the Court with the 2 discretion to limit the amount Plaintiffs may recover from the employer.”); Bright v. 99c Only 3 Stores, 189 Cal. App. 4th 1472, 1480 n.8 (2010) (“The trial court has discretion to award less than 4 the maximum amount of the civil penalty . . . .”). Thus, the Court has broad discretion to award
5 PAGA penalties as the Court sees fit.

6 Here, the Court finds that awarding the maximum amount of the requested PAGA 7 penalties would be unjust and oppressive, as explained below. As such, the Court awards
8 $48,046,000 in PAGA penalties to the OVERTIME/INCT Wage Statement class for Wal-Mart’s
9 violation of § 226(a)(9). The amount of PAGA penalties awarded to the OVERTIME/INCT Wage 10 Statement class would therefore match 100% the amount of § 226(e) statutory damages awarded, 11 and is approximately 36% of the original amount of PAGA penalties Plaintiffs requested. The law 12 supports the Court’s decision to reduce the PAGA penalties.

13 In Aguirre v. Genesis Logistics, the defendant was potentially liable up to $500,000 in § 14 226(e) statutory damages for violating § 226. The Aguirre court reduced PAGA penalties from 15 $1.8 million to $500,000 (approximately 28% of the original amount requested) “[g]iven that the 16 potential PAGA penalty is substantially greater than the penalty under Section 226.” 2013 WL
17 10936035, at *3 (C.D. Cal. Dec. 30, 2013). Thus, like in the instant case, the PAGA penalties 18 match 100% the amount of § 226(e) statutory damages awarded.

19 In Fleming v. Covidien Inc., the court found that awarding the maximum PAGA penalty of 20 $2.8 million would be unjust because “Defendants were not aware that the wage statements 21 violated the law and took prompt steps to correct all violations once notified.” 2011 WL 7563047, 22 at *4 (C.D. Cal. Aug. 12, 2011). Thus, the Fleming court awarded only $500,000 in PAGA 23 penalties, id. at *1, approximately 18% of the maximum amount requested.

24 In Thurman v. Bayshore Transit Management, Inc., the California Court of Appeal 25 affirmed a 30% reduction of the maximum PAGA penalties requested because it would be unjust 26 to award the maximum penalty amount when “defendants took their obligations under Wage 27 Order No. 9 seriously and attempted to comply with the law.” 203 Cal. App. 4th 1112, 1136

1 (2012). Thus, the Thurman court awarded $358,588.22 in PAGA penalties. Id. at 1119.

2 As mentioned above, Plaintiffs request $131,427,750 in PAGA penalties for the 3 OVERTIME/INCT Wage Statement Class for Wal-Mart’s violation of § 226(a)(9). If Plaintiffs 4 were to recover the maximum PAGA penalties available to the OVERTIME/INCT Wage 5 Statement class, then the PAGA penalty for the OVERTIME/INCT Wage Statement class would 6 be 273% greater than Plaintiffs’ § 226(e) statutory damages of $48,046,000. The Court has not 7 found any case that awards such a disproportionate PAGA penalty relative to statutory damages.
8 The amount of PAGA penalties awarded and the amount of statutory penalties awarded for the 9 underlying Labor Code violation should not be too disparate. Aguirre, 2013 WL 10936035, at *3 10 (reducing the amount of PAGA penalties awarded so that the PAGA penalties are not 11 “substantially greater than the penalty under Section 226”). Guided by the Aguirre court’s logic in 12 reducing the PAGA penalties, this Court reduces the PAGA penalties awarded to the 13 OVERTIME/INCT Wage Statement class to $48,046,000, which matches 100% the amount 14 awarded in § 226(e) statutory damages awarded for Wal-Mart’s underlying statutory violation.
15 This also is the exact ratio of PAGA penalties to statutory damages the Aguirre court awarded. Id.
16 at *4.

17 Here, the Court is awarding $48,046,000 in PAGA penalties out of a total requested of 18 $131,427,750. The Court has not found any case awarding a PAGA penalty as high as 19 $131,427,750. PAGA penalties are paid 75% to the California Labor and Workforce Development 20 Agency and 25% to aggrieved employees. Thus, in wage and hour class action cases that settle, 21 which are the overwhelming majority of such cases, very little of the total settlement is paid to 22 PAGA penalties in order to maximize payments to class members. See, e.g., Ceja-Corona v. CVS 23 Pharmacy, Inc., 2015 WL 222500, at *2-3 (E.D. Cal. Jan. 14, 2015) (preliminarily approving 24 $10,000 in PAGA penalties out of a total settlement amount of $900,000), report and 25 recommendation adopted, 2015 WL 925598 (E.D. Cal. Mar. 3, 2015); Nen Thio v. Genji, LLC, 14
26 F. Supp. 3d 1324, 1330 (N.D. Cal. 2014) (preliminarily approving $10,000 in PAGA penalties out 27 of a total settlement amount of $1,250,000); Franco v. Ruiz Food Prods., Inc., 2012 WL 5941801,

1 at *14 (E.D. Cal. Nov. 27, 2012) (granting final approval of $10,000 in PAGA penalties out of a 2 total settlement amount of $2,500,000); Garcia v. Gordon Trucking, Inc., 2012 WL 5364575, at 3 *3 (E.D. Cal. Oct. 31, 2012) (granting final approval of $10,000 in PAGA penalties out of a total
4 settlement amount of $3,700,000); Chu v. Wells Fargo Investments, LLC, 2011 WL 672645, at *1 5 (N.D. Cal. Feb. 16, 2011) (granting final approval of $10,000 in PAGA penalties out of a total 6 settlement amount of $6,900,000). In these settlements, the parties generally maximize statutory 7 penalties and minimize PAGA penalties. See, e.g., Franco, 2012 WL 5941801, at *2, *14 8 (approving a $10,000 PAGA award out of a total settlement amount of $2,500,000). Thus, it is 9 highly unusual to see a statutory damages claim of $48,046,000 and PAGA penalties request of 10 $131,427,750, which is 273% greater than the statutory damages claim.

11 In all the wage and hour class action settlements the Court found, the amount of statutory 12 damages awarded far exceeded the amount of PAGA penalties awarded, like in Franco. For 13 instance, the Chu court approved the allocation of $10,000 in PAGA penalties out of a total 14 settlement fund of $6,900,000. 2011 WL 672645, at *1. Additionally, in Brown v. CVS Pharmacy,
15 Inc., the same Plaintiffs' attorneys as in the instant case agreed to allocate $20,000 for PAGA
16 penalties out of a gross settlement amount of $3,000,000 for violations of § 226(a). 2017 WL
17 3494297, at *1 (C.D. Cal. Apr. 24, 2017). In another wage and hour settlement, the same 18 Plaintiffs' attorneys as in the instant case agreed to a PAGA award of $50,000 out of a gross
19 settlement amount of $11,000,000. Dynabursky v. Alliedbarton Sec. Servs., LP, 2016 WL 20 8921915, at *2 (C.D. Cal. Aug. 15, 2016). Similarly, in another wage and hour action that 21 included claims under § 226(a), the same Plaintiffs' attorneys as in the instant case entered into a 22 settlement where $66,666.67 was allocated to PAGA penalties out of a gross settlement amount of 23 $9,225,000. Villegas v. J.P. Morgan Chase & Co., Case No. 09-CV-00261-SBA (N.D. Cal.), ECF 24 Nos. 164 at 3, 183 at 3.

25 Moreover, the OVERTIME/INCT line item is predicated on the award of Wal-Mart's 26 discretionary MyShare bonus. The Court recognizes that Wal-Mart had no duty to pay employees 27 any bonuses in the first instance. To penalize Wal-Mart so disproportionately relative to statutory 28

1 the accuracy of the wage statements difficult.

2 Because the Court recognizes the challenges Wal-Mart faces in calculating and displaying 3 the OVERTIME/INCT line item, the Court believes that a decrease in the amount of PAGA 4 penalties awarded for Wal-Mart's failure to display the hours worked and rate paid for the 5 OVERTIME/INCT line item is warranted. However, that does not excuse Wal-Mart's failure to 6 comply with the Labor Code. Wal-Mart admits that the OVERTIME/INCT line item is 7 representable by an hourly rate multiplied by the hours worked. Tr. at 395:16-18.

8 b. Damages for Violation of § 226(a)(6) (regarding the statement of final pay 9 claim)

10 Plaintiffs request § 226(e) statutory damages as well as PAGA penalties for Wal-Mart's
11 violation of § 226(a)(6), Plaintiffs' statement of final pay claim. "It is within the sound discretion 12 of the trier of fact to select the formula most appropriate to compensate the injured party. The law 13 requires only that some reasonable basis of computation of damages be used, and the damages 14 may be computed even if the result reached is an approximation." Marsu, B.V. v. Walt Disney Co., 15 185 F.3d 932, 938-39 (9th Cir. 1999). The Court first discusses § 226(e) damages, then PAGA 16 penalties.

17 i. § 226(e) Statutory Damages

18 First, the Court notes that Wal-Mart was found liable to the Final Wage Statement Class 19 for violations of § 226(a)(6) occurring after May 11, 2018, the date the Court issued its summary
20 judgment order giving notice to Wal-Mart that its statements of final pay were out of compliance 21 with the Labor Code. ECF No. 121. However, Plaintiffs have not provided any § 226(e) statutory 22 damages calculations for the period after May 11, 2018. Plaintiffs' request of $5,823,900 in § 23 226(e) statutory damages for Wal-Mart's violations of § 226(a)(6) is calculated from a start date of 24 December 2, 2015, not May 11, 2018. Ex. 201-7. Thus, Plaintiffs' monetary request is 25 inapplicable here because the Court does not find liability until May 11, 2018.

26 "It is 'one of the most basic propositions of law . . . that the plaintiff bears the burden of 27 proving his case, including the amount of damages.'" Tourgeman v. Nelson & Kennard, 900 F.3d

1 1105, 1109 (9th Cir. 2018) (emphasis added); see also Aloe Vera of America, Inc. v. United States, 2 686 Fed. App'x 451, 452 (9th Cir. 2017) (“Because Plaintiffs failed to meet their burden of 3 proving actual damages, the district court awarded only statutory damages . . .”). Here, Plaintiffs 4 have failed to meet their burden of proof because Plaintiffs have not calculated § 226(e) statutory 5 damages for Wal-Mart’s violations of § 226(a)(6) from a start date of May 11, 2018. Instead, 6 Plaintiffs present evidence on § 226(e) statutory damages for Wal-Mart’s violations of § 226(a)(6) 7 beginning on the statute of limitations date of December 2, 2015. Ex. 201-7. Because Plaintiffs 8 have not met their burden of proof in calculating the amount of § 226(e) statutory damages
9 accumulated after May 11, 2018, the Court awards no § 226(e) statutory damages for Wal-Mart’s
10 violation of § 226(a)(6). See, e.g., Faria v. M/V Louise, 945 F.2d 1142, 1143 (9th Cir. 1991)
11 (“[T]he plaintiff bears the burden of proving his case, including the amount of damages.”) (citing 12 Webb v. Utah Tour Brokers Ass’n, 568 F.2d 670, 677 (10th Cir. 1977)). This is akin to the 13 situation in Webb, where the court held that the plaintiffs had failed to provide evidence 14 supporting the claimed amount of damages, noting that “[t]he court is not justified in rendering a 15 judgment based on possibility or speculation.” Webb, 568 F.2d at 677.

16 ii. PAGA Penalties

17 Second, Plaintiffs request $28,928,500 in PAGA penalties for the Final Wage Statement 18 Class. Ex. 201-7. The Court notes that the award of any PAGA penalties here is not limited to the 19 period of time after May 11, 2018. Because a PAGA claim seeks penalties on the LWDA’s behalf, 20 plaintiffs “seeking civil penalties under PAGA for a violation of section 226(a) do[] not have to 21 satisfy the ‘injury’ and ‘knowing and intentional’ requirements of section 226(e)(1).” Lopez v.
22 Friant & Assocs., LLC, 15 Cal. App. 5th 773, 788 (2017), review denied; McKenzie v. Fed. Exp.
23 Corp., 765 F. Supp. 2d 1222, 1232 (C.D. Cal. 2011) (plaintiffs “need only prove a violation of 24 Section 226(a), and need not establish a Section 226(e) injury”); Willner, 35 F. Supp. 3d at 1136 25 (“Willner is not required to establish injury in order to obtain judgment on this [PAGA] claim. All 26 she needs to establish is a violation of section 226(a)”). Therefore, per California labor law, PAGA 27 penalties here are not limited to the period of time when Wal-Mart’s violations are knowing and 1 intentional.

2           However, as the Court discussed above, the court has discretion to reduce the amount of 3 PAGA penalties awarded if, “based on the facts and circumstances of the particular case, to do
4 otherwise would result in an award that is unjust, arbitrary and oppressive, or confiscatory.” Cal.
5 Lab. Code § 2699(e)(2). For the following two reasons, the Court reduces the amount of PAGA 6 penalties awarded the Final Wage Statement Class to 20% of Plaintiffs’ original request of 7 $28,928,500 in PAGA penalties. Thus, the Court awards $5,785,700 in PAGA penalties to the 8 Final Wage Statement Class for Wal-Mart’s violations of § 226(a)(6).

9           First, the Court found there was uncertainty in the law allowing Wal-Mart to claim there 10 was a good faith dispute from December 2, 2015 to the Court’s May 11, 2018 summary judgment 11 order. Specifically, § 226(a)(6) provides: “[a]n employer, semimonthly or at the time of each 12 payment of wages, shall furnish to his or her employee . . . an accurate itemized statement in 13 writing . . . .” (emphasis added). The statute uses the disjunctive “or,” implying that the provision 14 of “an accurate itemized statement” could take place either semimonthly or at the time wages 15 were paid. By using the disjunctive “or,” § 226(a)(6) implied that employers could be in 16 compliance with the law so long as a compliant wage statement was issued semimonthly, and not 17 necessarily at the time of the payment of any wages. Thus, Wal-Mart had a good faith belief that 18 its final wage statements complied with § 226(a)(6) from December 2, 2015, to May 11, 2018, 19 approximately two and a half years. Wal-Mart did not have a good faith belief of its compliance 20 with § 226(a)(6) only from the May 11, 2018 summary judgment order to the November 30, 2018 21 trial, which is approximately 6 months. Because Wal-Mart had a good faith belief for such an 22 extended period of time, the Court finds that awarding the full $28,928,500 in PAGA penalties 23 requested by the Plaintiffs would be unjust and oppressive, and that a significant reduction is 24 appropriate. California courts have held that a defendant’s attempt to comply with the law is a 25 basis for reduction in a PAGA penalties award. Thurman, 203 Cal. App. 4th at 1136 26 (“[D]efendants took their obligations under Wage Order No. 9 seriously and attempted to comply 27 with the law.”).

28

1 & Co., 532 U.S. 843, 845, 854 (2001). “[F]ront pay is simply money awarded for lost 2 compensation during the period between judgment and reinstatement [of a job] or in lieu of 3 reinstatement.” Id. at 846. So in essence, front pay is an award for damages after judgment has 4 been entered. The United States Supreme Court has also held that “full relief under Title VII may 5 be awarded on a class basis.” United Airlines, Inc. v. McDonald, 432 U.S. 385, 389 n.6 (1977) 6 (internal quotation mark omitted). Combining the decision in United Airlines with the holding in 7 Pollard, the United States Supreme Court has therefore upheld the legality of a post-judgment 8 award of damages in a class action setting. Thus, damages in a class action do not have to 9 terminate at the date of class certification. See also Pitre v. Western Electric Co., 843 F.2d 1262, 10 1279 (10th Cir. 1988) (allowing the district court discretion to “determin[e] the appropriate 11 amount of back and front pay to which the class is entitled”).

12 ii. Whether Awarding PAGA Penalties and § 226(e) Damages Constitutes 13 Impermissible Double Recovery

14 Awarding both PAGA damages and § 226(e) penalties would not constitute impermissible 15 double recovery. The California Court of Appeal has held that for violations of § 226(a), “[t]here 16 are three different potential remedies available . . . (1) actual damages or statutory penalties; (2) 17 injunctive relief; and (3) civil penalties.” Raines v. Coastal Pac. Food Distribs., Inc., 23 Cal. App.
18 5th 667, 673 (2018) (emphasis added). The California Supreme Court has held that PAGA
19 damages are awarded as civil penalties. Iskanian v. CLS Transp. Los Angeles, LLC, 59 Cal. 4th 20 348, 381 (2014). Thus, because PAGA damages are civil penalties and are of a different nature 21 than the statutory penalties provided for in § 226(e), recovering both civil penalties and statutory 22 penalties would not constitute impermissible double recovery for the same underlying violation of 23 the California Labor Code.

24 This interpretation of California law is reinforced by PAGA’s statutory text, which 25 provides that “nothing in this part shall operate to limit an employee’s right to pursue or recover 26 other remedies available under state or federal law, either separately or concurrently with an action 27 taken under this part.” Cal. Lab. Code § 2699(g)(1). Moreover, recent courts have allowed 1 recovery of PAGA penalties in addition to other statutory violations of the California Labor Code.

2 See, e.g., Robinson v. Open Top Sightseeing San Francisco, LLC, 2018 WL 895572, at *7 (N.D.
3 Cal. Feb. 14, 2018) (holding that recovery under PAGA and additional violations of the Labor 4 Code are not duplicative); Diaz v. A&R Logistics, Inc., 2015 WL 11237469, at *5 (S.D. Cal. Sept.
5 16, 2015) (same); Stoddart v. Express Servs., Inc., 2015 WL 5522142, at *8-9 (E.D. Cal. Sept. 16, 6 2015) (same); Denton v. G4S Secure Solutions (USA) Inc., 2015 WL 2185293, at *4 (E.D. Cal.
7 May 8, 2015) (citing Thurman v. Bayshore Transit Mgmt., Inc., 203 Cal. App. 4th 1112, 1144-48 8 (2012)) (same).

9 The Court acknowledges, and Wal-Mart points out, that there is countervailing authority 10 that stands for the proposition that recovery under both PAGA and additional Labor Code sections 11 would be impermissible. See, e.g., Guifu Li v. A Perfect Day Franchise, Inc., 2012 WL 2236752, 12 at *17 (N.D. Cal. June 15, 2012) (“[G]ranted PAGA penalties for failure to provide accurate 13 wage statements would be duplicative recovery. Plaintiffs have provided no authority, and the 14 Court is aware of no authority, that would permit double recovery of essentially the same 15 penalties.”); Tran v. Companion Med Trans, LLC, 2016 WL 8925146, at *9 (C.D. Cal. Jan. 25, 16 2016) (same). Nevertheless, these cases are not persuasive as they do not acknowledge PAGA’s 17 statutory language, which provides that PAGA shall not limit an employee’s ability to seek other 18 remedies available under state law. Cal. Lab. Code § 2699(g)(1). Moreover, the recent California 19 Court of Appeal Raines case makes it clear that for violations of § 226(a), Plaintiffs have the 20 option of seeking both civil penalties (i.e., under PAGA) and statutory penalties (i.e., under § 21 226(e)). 23 Cal. App. 5th at 673. As this Court is sitting in diversity, the California courts’ 22 enunciation of the law is binding. Therefore, awarding damages under both PAGA and § 226 does 23 not constitute duplicative recovery.

24 iii. Whether Awarding PAGA Penalties Would Violate Due Process and the 25 Excessive Fines Clause

26 Wal-Mart claims that awarding PAGA penalties would first, violate the Eighth 27 Amendment’s Excessive Fines Clause, and second, violate due process. First, the Court finds that

1 under current law, the Eight Amendment’s Excessive Fines Clause is inapplicable here. The 2 United States Supreme Court has held: “[w]hile we agree with petitioners that punitive damages 3 advance the interests of punishment and deterrence, which are also among the interests advanced 4 by the criminal law, we fail to see how this overlap requires us to apply the Excessive Fines
5 Clause in a case between private parties.” Browning-Ferris Indus. of Vermont, Inc. v. Kelco 6 Disposal, Inc., 492 U.S. 257, 275 (1989) (emphasis added).

7 In the instant case, there are two private parties litigating civil penalties. Admittedly, 75% 8 of the PAGA award goes to the State of California by statute. Cal. Lab. Code § 2699(i).
9 Nonetheless, it is not the State of California that is prosecuting this case against Wal-Mart. It is 10 Magadia and the class he represents. In fact, the State’s LWDA has to explicitly decline to initiate 11 an investigation into an employer before an employee can bring a private PAGA action. Cal. Lab.
12 Code § 2699.3(a)(2)(A); see also Arias v. Superior Court, 46 Cal.4th 969, 980 (2009) (“[I]t was 13 therefore in the public interest to allow aggrieved employees, acting as private attorneys general, 14 to recover civil penalties for Labor Code violations . . . .” (emphasis added).); Thomas v. Aetna 15 Health of California, Inc., 2011 WL 2173715, at *18 (E.D. Cal. June 2, 2011) (“While the LWDA 16 may be interested in the outcome of a private civil action for PAGA penalties, it is not a party to 17 the suit” (emphasis added).); Machado v. M.A.T. & Sons Landscape, Inc., 2009 WL 2230788, at 18 *3 (E.D. Cal. July 23, 2009) (“[N]umerous courts have found that individuals have a private right 19 of action through PAGA . . . .”).

20 Second, the award of PAGA penalties does not violate due process. Wal-Mart plucks a 21 quote out from the United States Supreme Court’s decision in State Farm that states that the 22 penalty must have “a nexus to the specific harm suffered.” State Farm Mutual Auto. Ins. Co. v.
23 Campbell, 538 U.S. 408, 422 (2003).<sup>5</sup> Wal-Mart argues that the PAGA penalty does not have a 24 nexus to the specific harm suffered by Magadia. ECF No. 215 at 16. The Court rejects this

25

26 _____
27 <sup>5</sup> For context, the full quote is: “Lawful out-of-state conduct may be probative when it 28 demonstrates the deliberateness and culpability of the defendant’s action in the State where it is tortious, but that conduct must have a nexus to the specific harm suffered by the plaintiff.” Id.

1 argument. PAGA is expressly premised on punishing employers for underlying violations of the 2 California Labor Code. See, e.g., Cal. Lab. Code § 2699.3(a)(1)(A) (“The aggrieved employee 3 shall give written notice . . . of the specific provisions of this code alleged to have been violated, 4 including the facts and theories to support the alleged violation.”). To claim that there is not a 5 nexus between a PAGA penalty and the harm suffered via an underlying violation of the Labor 6 Code is simply not a facially valid argument. PAGA penalties only apply when there is an 7 underlying violation of the California Labor Code.

8 In sum, the Eighth Amendment’s Excessive Fines Clause does not apply here because the 9 instant case only involves private parties. Moreover, there is a nexus between PAGA penalties 10 awarded and the harm suffered via an underlying violation of the Labor Code because a PAGA 11 cause of action is available for litigants to vindicate their rights under the Labor Code. Thus, 12 awarding PAGA penalties does not violate due process.

13 iv. Whether PAGA Penalties Should be Limited to Past Labor Code Violations for 14 which the LWDA has been Provided Notice

15 California law requires that an aggrieved employee first give notice to the LWDA 16 identifying the Labor Code provisions alleged to have been violated by an employer. Id. If and 17 only if the LWDA provides notice that it does not intend to investigate the alleged Labor Code 18 violation does a private right of action under PAGA arise. Cal. Lab. Code § 2699.3(a)(2)(A). Wal-19 Mart cites no authority, and the Court has found none, that stands for the proposition that PAGA 20 penalties are limited to redressing past violations of the California Labor Code for which the 21 LWDA has been provided notice. Wal-Mart claims that PAGA penalties for continuing violations 22 of the Labor Code are available only after additional letters to the LWDA are sent notifying the 23 LWDA of these continuing violations. Tr. at 59:14-21. In essence, Wal-Mart argues that LWDA 24 notification letters are retroactive and only permit the retroactive award of damages stopping on 25 the date of the letter.

26 The Court has found case law supporting the proposition that Labor Code violations taking 27 place after the LWDA notice can be the foundation for PAGA penalties. In Fleming v. Covidien

1 Inc., the court awarded PAGA penalties for a period of time after the LWDA letter was sent; in 2 other words, the Fleming court did not cut off PAGA penalties at the date of the LWDA letter. The 3 LWDA was provided notice on July 29, 2010 that the wage statements an employer was issuing 4 violated § 226. 2011 WL 7563047, at *2. Nevertheless, the Fleming court awarded PAGA 5 penalties for the period between July 29, 2009 and September 1, 2010. Id. at *2-3. Under 6 California law, a PAGA claim is subject to a 1-year statute of limitations. Cal. Civ. Proc. Code §
 7 340(a). Because the LWDA letter in Fleming was sent on July 29, 2010, the Fleming court 8 interpreted the statute of limitations as restricting PAGA penalties to the period after July 29, 9 2009. 2011 WL 7563047, at *2. Moreover, the Fleming court stopped calculating PAGA damages 10 on September 1, 2010 because that was the end date of the certified class period. Id. at *1.

11 Additionally, the Schiller v. David’s Bridal, Inc. court considered post-LWDA letter 12 PAGA penalties as well. There, the court estimated PAGA penalties for the purpose of calculating 13 the amount in controversy. 2010 WL 2793650, at *7 (E.D. Cal. July 14, 2010). Even though the 14 LWDA notice was allegedly sent on January 14, 2010, Schiller v. David’s Bridal, Inc., No. 10-cv-15 616, ECF No. 1-1 at Ex. A p. 8, the Schiller court calculated PAGA penalties from January 15, 16 2009 to April 2010. 2010 WL 2793650, at *7. The Schiller court differed from the Fleming court 17 in interpreting the PAGA statute of limitations. The Schiller court interpreted the 1-year statute of 18 limitations as beginning on when the complaint was filed, instead of when the LWDA letter was 19 submitted as in Fleming. Id. at *6. Nonetheless, the Schiller court calculated PAGA penalties to 20 April 2010, past the LWDA letter’s mailing date of January 14, 2010, because April 2010 was 21 when the defendant filed its notice of removal (and the Schiller court was trying to determine 22 whether the amount in controversy was enough to remove the case to federal court). Id.

23 The Court’s interpretation of the PAGA statute is also supported by the legislative history.
 24 In allowing for the private right of action if the LWDA declined to investigate an alleged violation 25 of the Labor Code, the bill sponsors noted that “private actions to enforce the Labor Code are 26 needed because [the] LWDA simply does not have the resources to pursue all of the labor 27 violations occurring in the garment industry, agriculture, and other industries.” California

1 Assembly Committee on Judiciary, Bill Analysis, S.B. 796 (Dunn), June 26, 2003; see also Arias,
2 46 Cal. 4th at 986 (“The act’s declared purpose is to supplement enforcement actions by public
3 agencies, which lack adequate resources to bring all such actions themselves. . . . In a lawsuit 4 brought under the act, the employee plaintiff represents the same legal right and interest as state
5 labor law enforcement agencies . . .”). As exemplified by the Fleming and Schiller cases above, 6 Labor Code violations do not simply cease once an LWDA letter has been filed; rather, an 7 employer may continue to flagrantly violate the law. In order for the PAGA statute to have any 8 teeth, litigants should be able to seek relief for violations after an LWDA notice letter has been 9 sent because as the bill sponsors mentioned, the LWDA simply does not have the resources to 10 pursue all violations of the Labor Code. Once the LWDA declines to pursue an alleged violation, 11 it is up to the aggrieved employee to take action. It makes no sense to require an aggrieved litigant 12 to repeatedly submit letters to the LWDA once the LWDA has already declined to investigate an 13 alleged Labor Code violation. To impose such a requirement would be contrary to the legislative 14 intent embodied in PAGA, which is to allow private actions to remedy Labor Code violations once 15 the LWDA is unable or unwilling to pursue an alleged violation.

16 Wal-Mart argues that the statutory text supports its argument that PAGA is limited to only 17 redressing violations of the Labor Code prior to the LWDA notice letter. PAGA requires that an 18 aggrieved employee provide notice to the LWDA for “specific provisions of this code alleged to 19 have been violated.” Cal. Lab. Code § 2699.3(a)(1)(A) (emphasis added). However, the statute 20 does not preclude a private litigant from suing to redress violations of the Labor Code after the 21 LWDA notice letter is sent. Obviously, the LWDA notice letter can only include provisions of the 22 Labor Code alleged to have been violated because the aggrieved employee does not know at the 23 time whether the employer will continue to violate the Labor Code after the LWDA notice letter is 24 sent. If an employer continues to violate the Labor Code after the LWDA notice letter date, 25 nothing in the statute precludes the aggrieved employee from seeking redress for those continuing 26 violations.

27 In sum, the Court holds that PAGA penalties are not limited to redressing past violations of

1 the California Labor Code for which the LWDA has been provided notice. Rather, parties may 2 seek to recover PAGA penalties on continuing violations of the Labor Code even after the LWDA 3 notice letter is sent. This conclusion is buttressed by prior case law and legislative intent, which 4 indicate that the LWDA does not have the capacity to pursue all violations of the Labor Code, so 5 PAGA empowers employee plaintiffs to seek redress.

6 v. Whether PAGA’s Default Civil Penalties or those Penalties under Cal. Lab.
7 Code § 226.3 are Applicable

8 Under PAGA, the “default” penalty is $100 per each aggrieved employee per pay period 9 for the initial violation and $200 per pay period for a subsequent violation. Cal. Lab. Code § 10 2699(f)(2). The default penalty is “provided . . . for violations of Labor Code sections that did not 11 have their own [civil] penalty.” Diaz, 2015 WL 11237469, at *3. However, Cal. Lab. Code § 12 226.3 provides that “[a]ny employer who violates subdivision (a) of Section 226 shall be subject 13 to a civil penalty in the amount of two hundred fifty dollars ($250) per employee per violation in 14 an initial citation . . . for which the employer fails to provide the employee a wage deduction 15 statement or fails to keep the records required in subdivision (a) of Section 226.” Wal-Mart argues 16 that only a failure to provide an itemized wage statement and failure to keep records implicate the 17 penalties in § 226.3. However, the Court finds that Cal. Lab. Code § 226.3 penalties are applicable 18 as the appropriate measure of civil penalties under PAGA.

19 The only non-federal, California state court case interpreting the interplay between PAGA 20 and § 226 the Court has found, and the parties have cited, is Raines. In Raines, the California 21 Court of Appeal held:

22 Some courts have read section 226.3 to limit civil penalties [under 23 PAGA] to only those instances where the employer failed to provide 24 any wage statement or keep records. . . . We find more persuasive a 25 decision that found section 226.3 sets out a civil penalty for all 26 violations of section 226 (Culley v. Lincare, Inc. (E.D. Cal. 2017) 236 27 F. Supp. 3d 1184, 1194). . . . Section 226(a) is intended to require 28 employers to provide an adequate wage statement, itemizing the information to be included, to assist the employee in determining whether he or she has been compensated properly. Section 226.3 provides the civil penalty for failure to comply.

23 Cal. App. 5th at 675 (internal quotation marks omitted). The Raines court held that Cal. Lab.

1 Code § 226.3 sets out a civil penalty for violations of Cal. Lab. Code § 226. Id.

2 “[F]ederal courts sitting in diversity cases, when deciding questions of substantive law, are 3 bound by state court decisions as well as state statutes.” Hanna, 380 U.S. at 465 (internal 4 quotation marks omitted). The Court finds that it is bound by the decision in Raines, the only 5 extant state court decision interpreting the applicability of § 226.3 penalties to PAGA. Thus, the 6 correct measure of PAGA penalties is found under Cal. Lab. Code § 226.3, which provides that an 7 initial violation of § 226(a) be assessed a civil penalty of $250.

8 vi. Whether Dr. Kriegler’s Damages Calculations are Reliable

9 Wal-Mart asserts that because Dr. Kriegler “failed to show his work,” his damages 10 calculations should not be trusted. ECF No. 215 at 16-17. The Court disagrees. “[I]f an expert 11 reliably applies the appropriate legal formula to determine damages in a particular case, then that 12 expert’s methodology is reliable.” Nationwide Trans. Fin. v. Cass Info. Sys., Inc., 2006 WL 13 5242377, at *3 (D. Nev. Mar. 6, 2006). Dr. Kriegler testified at length as to how his computational 14 code was programmed to arrive at his damages calculations. This code was also provided to Wal-15 Mart, who did not call its own rebuttal damages expert. All the methods used by Dr. Kriegler were 16 in line with what the related statutory provisions require. Wal-Mart cites no case law, and the 17 Court finds none, that requires that the expert disclose in his expert report all his coding and work 18 to render the expert’s damages calculations valid. Here, Dr. Kriegler has sufficiently demonstrated 19 the reliability of his calculations through his testimony despite omitting such numbers as the 20 number of violations of employees included in the damages calculations.

21 C. Judicial Notice

22 Wal-Mart has filed a request that the Court take judicial notice of the California Labor 23 Commissioner’s Memorandum of Points and Authorities re New Trial and the California Labor 24 Commissioner’s Memorandum of Points and Authorities In Opposition to Petition For Writ of 25 Mandate in an action entitled Bodega Latina Corp. v. Labor Commissioner of the State of 26 California, Los Angeles Superior Court, Case No. BS162695. ECF No. 215-1. Both of these 27 documents are briefs submitted in the Bodega case that argue that the Bodega court should allow

1 the LWDA to investigate Labor Code violations years after the LWDA first declined to investigate
2 them. Plaintiffs object to this request for judicial notice because “the materials attached thereto
3 were never submitted at trial to permit Plaintiff to object and/or question witnesses about said 4 documents.” ECF No. 216 at 3. Plaintiffs’ argument is not well-taken and is beside the point. A 5 court “may take notice of proceedings in other courts, both within and without the federal judicial 6 system, if those proceedings have a direct relation to matters at issue.” United States ex rel.
7 Robinson Rancheria Citizens Council v. Borneo, Inc., 971 F.2d 244, 248 (9th Cir. 1992). A court 8 may also take judicial notice of the existence of matters of public record, such as a prior order or 9 decision, but not the truth of the disputed facts cited therein. Lee v. City of Los Angeles, 250 F.3d 10 668, 689-90 (9th Cir. 2001). Because the documents Wal-Mart supplied bear on the question of 11 the retroactivity of the LWDA notice, the Court GRANTS Wal-Mart’s request for judicial notice.

12 In response to Wal-Mart’s request for judicial notice, Plaintiffs submit a request to address 13 the documents Wal-Mart provided. ECF No. 216 at 3. This request is DENIED. Also in response 14 to Wal-Mart’s request for judicial notice, Plaintiffs submit their own request for judicial notice of 15 the settlement in Brown v. Wal-Mart Store, Inc., No. 09-cv-3339-EJD, “which further supports 16 Defendants’ ability to pay the PAGA penalties.” ECF No. 216 at 3. The proceedings in Brown do 17 not have a direct relation to matters at issue in this case as required under Robinson Rancheria 18 Citizens Council—the question of Wal-Mart’s ability to pay any PAGA penalties has never been 19 litigated in the instant case—so Plaintiffs’ request for judicial notice is DENIED.

20 III. CONCLUSION

21 For the foregoing reasons, the Court decertifies the Meal Period Regular Rate Class, and 22 denies Magadia’s individual claim for Wal-Mart’s violation of Cal. Lab. Code § 226.7.
23 Nevertheless, the Court finds that Wal-Mart violated Cal. Lab. Code § 226.7 for failure to pay 24 adequate compensation for missed meal breaks, and awards $70,000 in PAGA penalties to Wal-25 Mart employees who had meal exceptions coded in the EMS system under codes 5 or 12 since 26 October 4, 2015. Thus, the total award for Plaintiffs’ § 226.7 claim is $70,000.

27 Moreover, the Court awards Plaintiffs statutory damages under Cal. Lab. Code § 226(e) to

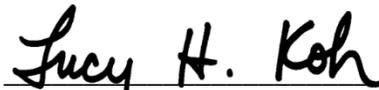

1 the OVERTIME/INCT Wage Statement Class for Wal-Mart's violations of Cal. Lab. Code §
2 226(a)(9) in the amount of $48,046,000. In addition, the Court awards $48,046,000 in PAGA
3 penalties to the OVERTIME/INCT Wage Statement Class. Thus, the total award for Plaintiffs' § 4 226(a)(9) claim is $96,092,000.

5 As aforementioned, Plaintiffs did not calculate the damages amount for Wal-Mart's 6 violations of § 226(a)(6) (regarding the statement of final pay claim) occurring after May 11, 7 2018, and thus did not meet their burden of proof on damages for the statement of final pay claim.
8 Therefore, the Court does not award § 226(e) statutory damages to the Final Wage Statement
9 Class. However, the Court awards $5,785,700 in PAGA penalties to the Final Wage Statement 10 Class for Wal-Mart's violations of § 226(a)(6).

11 Thus, Plaintiffs are awarded $48,046,000 in total § 226(e) statutory damages, and 12 $53,901,700 in total PAGA penalties for an overall total of $101,947,700.
